McCarl Lifts NRA Boycott Against Ford; U. S. Must Prove Code Violations

Regulations of Recovery Need No Affirmative, Says Opinion.

Comptroller Rule Hit by Johnson

Holds President's Order Was Misinterpreted by Official.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Holding that Henry Ford must be assumed to be complying with NRA requirements unless proved otherwise, two detailed opinions of Comptroller General J. R. McCarl yesterday broke the back of the Government's hasty boycott of the Detroit manufacturer.

In letters to the Secretaries of Commerce and Agriculture, the Comptroller General pointed out that neither the automobile code nor the President's executive order limiting purchases to NRA adherents requires "affirmative assent," such as a signature of compliance. The manufacturer, therefore, is eligible for Government contracts.

From Fort Worth, Tex., however, came a direct challenge from Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson himself, who told the Associated Press he believed the Comptroller General had misinterpreted the President's order.

Johnson Sees Uncertainty.

Although Comptroller General McCarl's rulings are inevitably final, Gen. Johnson thought "the whole thing is still up in the air."

The only apparent explanation for the Administration's attempt to reject Ford bids, on what was found to be unsound ground, lay in an impatience to bring into line a manufacturer whose tacit opposition was thwarting the whole recovery program.

Gen. Johnson himself did not initiate the boycott, further than to announce the action of other departments—zealous to back the NRA—in holding up Ford contracts, and in trading in his own limousine. Their action was predicated on the belief that Ford was not complying in that he had steadfastly refused to "fly the Blue Eagle," and engaged in verbal sniping from Detroit.

Without seeing the complete decision of the Comptroller General, Gen. Johnson declared he had "failed to hit the point unless there is other basis for his ruling than appears on the surface." He added there were "several questions" involved, and that the matter would have to be decided by the President.

Cites President's Rules.

"The President," the Associated Press quoted him, "has set up rules for bidders requiring that they must have made affirmative agreement to comply with the code for their industry. As far as I know, Ford is complying with the automobile code, but he has not agreed to it and Edsel told me he never would agree. That would seem to let him

Ship Searched For Kidnapers

Babe Ruth, 160 Others Detained in Coast Police Hunt.

San Diego, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP).—An airplane dash from San Francisco and an exhaustive search of an ocean liner here proved futile today for police and Federal agents seeking the kidnapers of Brooke L. Hart of San Jose.

The northern officers, assisted by squads of police and detectives here and ship's officers, spent hours examining every passenger and person aboard the Hawaii-bound Matson Liner Lurline, looking for two suspicious characters reported as stowed away on the San Francisco-Los Angeles run.

Babe Ruth and his daughter and some 160 other passengers were detained on the vessel while the search went on.

The finding of a wallet belonging to the wealthy young San Jose merchant, reported to be held for $40,000 ransom, prompted the search. This was found last night on the guard rail of a fuel ship that had been moored yesterday alongside the Lurline in San Francisco Bay.

Pola Negri Collapses; Condition Not Serious

Pittsburgh, Nov. 11 (AP).—Pola Negri, former screen star, was reported tonight to have collapsed after completing the first week of her American debut on the legitimate stage in "A Trip to Pressburg."

Dr. R. A. Walter, physician at her hotel, said Miss Negri's condition was not serious. Miss Negri's secretary said the show is scheduled to open Monday in Washington and that she believed the actress would be able to appear.

J. P. Hill, Dry Foe, Enters Race For Governor of Maryland

Factional Fight in G. O. P. Indicated by Filing Against Nice.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Announcement by John Philip Hill yesterday of his candidacy for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in Maryland, 10 months in advance of the primary election, forecasts a strenuous political campaign in that State, with factional fighting in the ranks of both parties.

Mr. Hill, a foe of National prohibition from the day of its enactment and former member of Congress from Baltimore, is almost as well known in Washington as he is in Marylnad. For years he has maintained a home and a law office here, dividing his time between the Capital and Baltimore. Well known in Washington society, Mr. Hill is commander of the Cavalry Reserve at Fort Myer.

Made Wine in Back Yard.

He announced his desire to be the Republican candidate for Maryland's Governor next year at his Baltimore home, 3 West Franklin street, known as "Franklin Farms" since the day he made wine in his back yard to test the home manufacture section of the Volstead act. "Franklin Farms" is in the middle of Baltimore and the entire back yard is paved with brick.

Mr. Hill, as a colonel of cavalry, marched in the Maryland veterans parade in Baltimore yesterday and afterward invited to his home "such of his fellow-marchers as were athirst," according to the announcement of the proceedings. There he told his friends of his decision to seek his party's approval for the governorship.

Peace Parade By Students Causes Clash

Antiwar Demonstrations Irk Legion, Arouse Police Action.

Boston Nov. 11 (AP).—Collegiate antiwar demonstrations in two Massachusetts college communities today aroused the ire of American Legion officials and brought police into action as Armistice Day was observed throughout the State with military and NRA parades.

The antiwar groups held forth in Wellesley and Northampton, with students of Wellesley Collge active in the former place and those of Smith Mount Holyoke, Amherst and Massachusetss State, in the latter. At Cambridge, members of the Liberal Club of Harvard University heeded an edict of President James B. Conant barring them from an antiwar demonstration in historic Harvard yard while 1,200 West Point cadets, in town for the Harvard-Army football game, had the freedom of the yard.

A placard carried by students participating in the "peace parade" at Northampton was seized by police. They did not resist police.

An old difference between Wellesley College students and Legionnaires was widened when 75 girls, carrying antiwar placards, swung in behind the Armistice Day parade and later took up a position opposite the veterans as they conducted exercices on the town green.

'Kidnaped' Baby Found Asleep in Nearby Home

Los Angeles, Nov. 11 (AP).—A frantic search throughout southern California for Peter Baldwin, 2, son of the general manager of the office here of the San Francisco Bridge Co., and his supposed kidnapers, ended today when the child was found sleeping with two playmates in the home of a neighbor.

"The child was screaming in the street last night," said Mrs. A. H. Nerad, the neighbor. "I threw a blanket around him and took him into my home."

Hull Leaves With Soviet Deal "In Air"

Prospects in Montevideo Held Less Promising Than Russian.

By Kendall Foss.

Secretary Hull set off for Montevideo yesterday leaving the outcome of this country's one remaining substantial foreign trade prospect—the Soviet negotiations—still undeclared.

There is, of course, no real doubt left on the actual score of recognition; it is now only a question of precisely what day will witness the formal announcement of the conclusion of the discussions. Indications are that Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, British debt negotiator, stands a better than even chance of finding Maxim Litvinoff a fellow passenger when he boards the Majestic in New York next Wednesday. Certainly Litvinoff would like to make that boat.

Trade Outlook Good.

After recognition comes trade. The prospects for a very sizable amount of business with the Soviet Union are good, even excellent—providing credits can be arranged and a method worked out for the repayment of these credits in either goods or gold.

This is probably more than can be said for trade prospects with other countries just now; for Russia alone is in position more or less to ignore possible fluctuations in the international value of the dollar. Her system of planned imports and exports under a government monopoly of trade makes it possible for her to figure in relative values instead of cash returns.

That is, if the price ratio between the things she wants to buy and the things she is prepared to sell remains fairly constant inside one

Paraguayan Repulse Claimed by Bolivians

La Paz, Nov. 11 (AP).—The Bolivian government announced today its troops had repulsed a strong Paraguayan attack in the Arce sector of the Chaco Boreal. Afterward, according to the communique, the Bolivians followed up with a successful counterattack.

Planned Rise in Dry Cleaning Cost Brings Protests to NRA

Complaints against a possible 100 per cent increase in Washington dry cleaning prices swamped NRA headquarters yesterday, but officials seemed unruffled—figuratively and literally.

The hubbub arose from approval by the President and the Recovery Administration of a cleaners and dyers' code making possible fixing of a minimum price. The rub came when NRA executives indicated they believed $1.50 a "normal" charge for cleaning a suit, though 75 cents is the present average price in Washington.

Protests from men and women—the price of cleaning dresses also is involved—drew announcement that local prices would be fixed Tuesday at a meeting of the directors of National Dry Cleaners. With a sharp price raise a possibility, flourishing business seemed in the offing for cleaners tomorrow.

A. D. Whiteside, division administrator and the man who passed on the controversial clause, was wearing a neatly creased suit when questioned by reporters assigned to "clean up" the story. He readily admitted he has been paying $1 to have his suits cleaned at the Shoreham Hotel.

Whiteside, in private life president of Dun & Bradstreet, indicated a terrible crimp wouldn't be put in his purse should the ante be raised 25 or 50 cents. He explained the NRA contemplates a price that will make it possible for cleaners to pay their employes a living wage.

Food Code Is Dropped; Board Quits

Strife Hinted, But Peek Says Group Served Its Purpose.

Regulations for Each Branch of Industry Is Aim Now.

(Associated Press.)

The Farm Administration abandoned its plan for promulgation of a master food code and at the same time announced dissolution of the food industry's advisory board, an unofficial group consisting of representatives of distributing and processing industries.

Instead of a single master code, the administration will now direct its efforts toward master codes for each branch of the food industry, with separate ones for manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers. These are to be supplemented by codes covering various divisions of these general branches.

Explanations Conflict.

There were conflicts in the explanation for dissolution of the board, which was organized by Charles J. Brand, former coadministrator of the farm act, who resigned in September, after being subjected to criticism. Brand organized the board last June.

Farm Administrator George N. Peek explained through his aids that the board "had served its purpose" and that its members desired to be released of even an informal association with the Farm Administration, so that they would be completely free to represent their industries during the formulation of codes and marketing agreements.

Reports persisted, however, that some members of the board were out of sympathy with the Farm Administration's plans for codes and agreements and were also irked by the delay in formulating codes. There are more than 500 such proposals awaiting action by the Farm Administration.

Staff Is Disbanded.

The Advisory Board's staff, recruited in June, was disbanded last month, but the executive committee had continued to function. The members of this committee were C. M. Chester, New York, president of the General Foods Corporation; R. R. Deupree, Cincinnati, president of Procter & Gamble Co.; Arthur C. Dorrance, of Camden, N. J., president of Campbell Soup Co., and Roy E. Tomlinson, of New York, president of the National Biscuit Co.

Spokesmen for the Farm Administration asserted that the dissolution of the board came about through mutual agreement and that no important differences of opinion had developed between members of the board and the Farm Administration. A portion of a letter by Peek was made public in which he expressed "appreciation" for the aid given by members of the board and informed them that if "the need arises" he would call upon them for assistance once more.

North Cuba Hit By New Revolt

Havana Thrown Into Panic When Rebel Snipers Fire in Streets.

Havana, Nov. 11 (AP).—Despite official assurances that the interior of Cuba was becoming quiet after rebellious movements, reports from Santiago tonight said the entire district around Puerto Padre on the north coast was in a state of rebellion.

Armed bands roamed the area around Punas, Tunas and Mayard. Rebels were reported in the field at Sagua, Tanamo, Chaparra and Delicias near Puerto Padre.

The garrison at Holouin, under command of a sergeant, reportedly joined rebel bands yesterday and troops were sent from Santiago to Holouin.

Army forces throughout Oriente Province were withdrawn from outlying posts and concentrated at more strategic points, ready for any emergency.

In Havana a flurry of sniping by rebels threw the capital into a panic for an hour and a half before soldiers, fearing another rebellious outburst, restored a temporary peace.

Soldiers detained all passengers who arrived in a Pan-American Airways plane from Miami today. Four American citizens were among the passengers. They were immediately released. Grant Mason, manager of the Airways office, said he did not know the reason for detention of the passengers unless as a precautionary measure.

Plane Damage Ends Wedell's Speed Dash

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 11 (AP).—A damaged cowling today forced James Wedell, speed pilot, to abandon his attempt to set a new flight record between New York and Coral Gables, Fla., after he had averaged more than 300 miles an hour from New York to Raleigh.

Wedell, who holds the unofficial world land plane record, put his ship down at the Municipal Airport near here at 1:27 p. m., just 1 hour and 29 minutes after taking off from Floyd Bennett Field, New York.

Japan Denies Planes Lost In Red Raid

Sinking of Two Tokyo Ships Off Kamchatka Also Ridiculed.

U. S. and British Circles Inclined to Doubt Moscow Rumors.

Tokyo, Sunday, Nov. 12 (U.P.). Government officials today denied reports circulated in Moscow that a number of Japanese airplanes had been shot down by Soviet forces at the Siberian frontier.

Naval officials also categorically denied similar reports that two Japanese Navy auxiliary vessels had been destroyed in Soviet waters. The reports had been circulated in diplomatic circles in Moscow, but were not confirmed or commented on by the Moscow government.

The officials were categoric in their denials, one spokesman, describing them as "absurd."

No Ships in Area.

The naval spokesman said:

"We have had no naval auxiliary in the Kamtchatka area since the fishing season ended in September."

He expressed regret that the report had been circulated.

"Evidently it was started by a third party," the spokesman said.

"It would be interesting, however, to know the real intention of Soviet officials in passing these reports through a strict censorship," the spokesman said.

London, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—British official circles were inclined to be skeptical regarding reports circulated in Moscow that a number of Japanese planes had been shot down while flying over the Soviet borders.

The story, an official said, "was fantastic," but he added "fantastic things have been known to happen before."

Moscow (Sunday), Nov. 12 (U.P.).—Reports, which met with silence on the part of the Russian government, reached foreign diplomatic circles last night that a number of Japanese airplanes, flying over the Soviet Siberian borders, had been shot down eight days ago.

The reports came at the time of a grave situation recently outlined by Premier Viashelev Molotov. He warned Japan that the Soviet would suffer no invasion of her territory. Warnings also had been sent Tokyo through the Russian Ambassador regarding alleged violation of the Soviet's borders by Japanese airplanes.

"6 Planes Shot Down."

The report said that six out of nine airplanes had been shot down, and that 20 Japanese attached to the squadron had been captured or killed.

A second reported incident, equally without confirmation, said that two Japanese vessels, near Kamchatka, had been blown up by Soviet coast guards, after repeated warnings to retire from Russian territorial waters.

Two days ago, the Moscow foreign office made public a protest to Tokyo against alleged "unprecedented and gross violation of Soviet frontiers," and specified the alleged flight of nine Japanese planes a week ago over Russian territory.

"I insist that such action shall not be repeated in the future," Constantine Yurenev, Soviet Ambassador to Japan, told the Japanese officials.

The government at that time demanded that Japan investigate the incident and punish the guilty, concluding with the hope that Japan would "take genuine steps to comply."

No Report Here on Clash.

State Department and Soviet officials here, said yesterday they had received no report of Japanese military planes having been shot down by Russian defense forces in Manchuria.

Both American officials and members of Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinov's party manifested keen interest in reports from Moscow on the border incident.

In the absence of official reports, Washington experts were inclined to be skeptical of the reports from Moscow.

U. S.-Soviet Plane Plant Held Certain

N. Y. Paper Says Project Has Federal Approval.

8A HER

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—The New York Herald Tribune says negotiations for the establishment of an American-supervised aircraft engine plant in Soviet Russia have been completed between representatives of the Soviet and the Curtiss-Wright Corporation.

The project, which has the approval of the United States Army and Navy, the newspaper says, involves a new five-year military and commercial aviation expansion program which is said to be a part of Moscow's answer to a growing Japanese menace. The project is expected to bring approximately $1,000,000 annually in new business to the American aviation industry.

The plant in Russia would produce Cyclone and other Wright motors under a foreign licensing agreement, the newspaper says, adding that the permission of the Army and Navy was necessary because these services hold an exclusive option on types they do not wish to see fall in the hands of other nations.

Wallace Denounces Farm Holiday in Iowa Speech; Strikers Renew Violence

Writer Hears of Farmers' Distress, But Fails to Find It

Nicholas Roosevelt Says They Tell of Woes Amid Plenty.

By Nicholas Roosevelt.

Former Minister to Hungary, outstanding economics writer and cousin of President Theodore Roosevelt.

This is the first of a series of 10 articles written by Mr. Roosevelt after a month's tour through the Middle Western agricultural States.

A pleasant land laid desolate; evicted farmers straggling along the roadside, helpless, homeless, hopeless; debts—mountains of debts—bearing down on those who still own their farms; on all sides poverty, distress, despair; section arrayed against section and class against class; farmers' strikes; loss of faith in America and the American system.

This is the impression that the East has of the farm problem.

How nearly is this picture true?

To find this out I spent some weeks in the Mississippi basin. I traveled hundreds of miles over fabulously rich soil, past farms with large barns, tall corn, fat cattle and hogs, and through little towns with neat frame houses, smooth lawns and tidy gardens. I spoke with farmers, marchants, lawyers, teachers, journalists, bankers, insurance men and labor leaders. I listened to many a tale of woe. The burden of their stories was the same—"Give us higher prices for our farm produce or we perish." A truculent few varied it: "Help us or we strike back at you." All agreed that their present condition was unbearable. But few agreed as to what should be done about it.

NICHOLAS ROOSEVELT.

Fresh from the squalor of our Eastern industrial centers, and only recently back from a tour through impoverished agricultural Europe, these farms in Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and Kansas seemed incredibly rich and the people living on them entitled to envy more than sympathy.

"You mustn't believe your eyes," I was told whenever I commented on what I saw. "Appearances are deceitful. The farmers are in a desperate condition. They are facing ruin."

Pressed for details, my informants would inevitably mention debts, taxes and farm prices, and the increasing cost of living, which

Quiz on Nazi Hold in U. S. Set Tuesday

200 Called to Tell House Group of Propaganda, Says Dickstein.

With 200 witnesses called, including publishers of the Staats-Zeitung, a German language daily paper of New York, a House Immigration subcommittee on Tuesday will begin investigation of Nazi activities in the United States.

The Ridder brothers, Victor and Herman, the publishers, whose anti-Nazi tendencies allegedly brought semiofficial representations from the Nazi press office in Berlin, will be first among those called, Chairman Samuel Dickstein announced last night from New York.

Heinz Spanknoebel, whose activities in America in behalf of the New Germany of Adolph Hitler, and whose warning to the Staats-Zeitung to stop giving so much space to Jewish opposition to Hitler brought widespread protest, was indicated by a Federal jury in New York Friday.

Chairman Dickstein, who believes Spanknoebel has "flown the country," said all attempts to reach him as a witness have been futile. The New York Federal grand jury found Spanknoebel either was the agent of the press office of the German ministry of propaganda or represented himself as such.

Called long-distance phone last night by The Washington Post, Dickstein charged Spanknoebel "should have been arrested months ago and would have been if some people had not been lax in their duties."

"We have got to revamp the

Wiggin Sued In 100 Million Chase Losses

135 of Bank Directors Are Included With Former Chairman.

New York, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Albert H. Wiggin, former chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank, and 135 directors of the bank were made defendants today in suit filed [illegible] Supreme Court to recover $100,000,000.

The suit was to recover losses said to have been sustained by the bank as a result of alleged negligence, waste and misconduct. Attorneys who filed the suit said they were ac[illegible]holders.

Wiggin, who received a pension of $100,000 annually until he voluntarily gave it up at the time of his recent testimony in the Senate committee investigation, was charged specifically with having utilized privileged information and his post as chairman to his own gain, "both illegally and without regard for the interests of stockholders."

The suit charged that a series of conspiracies were entered into by bank officials for their own profit and to the detriment of the interests of stockholders.

Charges also were made in the complaint that certain corporations controlled by Wiggin were part of "a grand plan of manipulation culminating in substantial personal profits." The complaint also attacked the alleged "exhorbitant amounts" paid to bank officers in the form of bonuses.

A charge was made that the defendants traded in stock of the bank and manipulated the market price.

Wiggin said his attorneys had accepted service in the suit.

Reputed Replacement of G.P.O. Workers by Influence Criticized

Reported replacement of 90 dismissed workers, all colored except four, at the Government Printing Office by 100 persons said to have patronage backing, was criticized yesterday by the Civil Service Reinstatement League.

While league officials declined to comment until they completed an investigation of the turnover, they said rumors of discrimination against colored persons by those in charge of the printing office would be discussed tomorrow night at a meeting of the executive committee.

Miss Eleanor Nelson, league president, said she was "unable to understand" why George H. Carter, public printer, yesterday declined to grant an interview to a committee of five that called to protest his failure to show preference to the dismissed workers when jobs they once held were filled.

The dismissed workers expressed annoyance at Carter's refusal to see them July 1, when they forwarded a petition asking that they receive 90-day furloughs without pay. Miss Nelson said the only comment the workers or the league had received from the public printer was a written statement in which he explained the dismissals were caused by decreased appropriations. He added that those stricken from the rolls were married and had husbands or wives in the service.

League officials said Carter refused to receive the committee when informed through a subordinate they desired to question him about his statement. The league argued married persons should be dismissed only for economy purposes and not if they were to be replaced.

"There were some dismissals in June and July," Carter told reporters. "All persons removed had other sources of income. As to discrimination against any race or creed, that's absolutely untrue."

7,000 Cheer Secretary as He Outlines Relief Plans.

Points Out Price Rise Since March

Rebellion No Solution, He Says, Promising More U. S. Cash.

Secretary Wallace, carrying the Administration's fight against the farm strike to the heart of the Midwest, last night outlined in Des Moines the relief program in detail and emphasized that violence would accomplish nothing.

Even while Wallace was speaking, striking employes seized a packing plant in Minnesota, where two sheriffs declared the farm strike was getting out of hand. Four companies of militia were being mobilized for emergency duty at Austin, Minn.

Des Moines, Iowa, Nov. 11 (AP).—Secretary of Agriculture Wallace tonight pleaded with a responsive home-State audience, officially estimated at 7,000 persons, for support of the Administration's corn-hog program and predicted such support would mean higher farm income.

Greeted before the start of his address in the Coliseum, with the singing of Iowa's "Corn Song" by the crowd which included delegations of "dirt farmers," legislators and business men, the Cabinet member was accorded frequent applause throughout his formal speech and another outburst of handclapping as he finished.

Says Prosperity Flowing.

Asserting that the Administration's program for wheat and cotton States had provided farmers with "money to spend for the first time in many months," and started "the circuit flow of prosperity," Secretary Wallace said:

"Two or three months from now I believe it will be possible to say the same things about the corn country, if the people here wish it to be so."

"The farmers can not be defeated in this program unless they defeat themselves," he continued. "If we do not make the corn and hog program succeed, we are in for worse times than we have ever seen."

The corn-hog program, Wallace said, "will bring $350,000,000 in benefit payments into the corn belt—about $75,000,000 in Iowa alone—between January 1, 1834, and the spring of 1935."

Assures Raised Income.

The corn-hog program, coupled with the President's monetary policy, offers the way for the corn belt farmer to enjoy increased farm income, he asserted.

After concluding his formal speech, the youthful Secretary leaned over the speakers' stand for a "friendly talk with the home folks."

For 15 minutes he spoke informally. When he had finished, the cheers again started. They continued until a member of the Secretary's party held up a hand and said: "That's all." Only then did the crowd turn toward the doors.

No Effect, Says Reno.

Milo Reno, National Farm Holiday Association persident, said tonight the address of Secretary Wallace would have "absolutely no effect" on the farm strike.

Concerning Wallace's statement that "there is opportunity to join the holiday movement and raise hell," Reno declared:

"I see Wallace mentioned the farm holiday. As far as that goes,

Trojans' Downfall Feature of Varied Sports Happenings

Sports claimed national attention on three fronts yesterday with golf and racing edging onto the stage where football had been holding sway.

Chief of all the football upsets was Stanford's 13-7 victory over Southern California, the first defeat for the Trojans in three seasons, a game that further depleted the thinning ranks of the unbeaten teams.

Army, victor over Harvard 27-0; Georgia, triumphant over Yale, 7-0; Princeton, conqueror of Dartmouth, 7-0, and Michigan, 10-6 winner over Iowa, continued to set the pace for the unbeaten and untied fraternity. Navy met defeat by Columbia, 13-7, and Notre Dame was handed its fourth straight beating, 19-0, by Purdue.

Washington was the golfing center of the Nation yesterday as ranking stars competed in the National Capital Open which saw Paul Runyon, of White Plains, N. Y., set the pace for the first day with an 18-hole round of 70.

Racing's outstanding feature of the day, the $5,000 Riggs Handicap at Pimlico, saw W. R. Coe's Pomposity come with a rush through the stretch to win the race in which Mate, the favorite, finished fourth.

Fear of Double Tax on Liquor Advanced Here

State and Federal Plans Mapped by Delegates From 10 States.

Taxation of legal liquor yesterday remained the center of the interest attendant to repeal of the eighteenth amendment, with a group of representatives from 10 States meeting here to discus future action.

This group, meeting as the Interstate Commission on Conflicting Taxation, appeared to be concerned chiefly with possible double taxation of liquor by State and Federal governments. They feared the total tax would be so high that bootleggers would be more firmly entrenched.

Although no definite decisions were reached, several proposals aimed at overcoming this problem were discussed. One proposal was that the States continue their activities to charging license fees for the sale and manufacture of liquor, leaving the imposition of specific taxes to the Federal Government.

One plan contemplated a system whereby the Federal Government, after collecting all liquor taxes, would make an allocation of revenue to States, leaving out of consideration, however, States remaining dry after repeal becomes effective. It was conceded that execution of such a proposal contained many difficulties.

Tax Trade Proposed.

In case these diffculties could not be overcome, it was proposed as an alternative that States enter into a trading agreement with Federal authorities under which States would forego the right to tax liquor sales and the Federal Government in turn would definitely withdraw from other fields of taxation enjoyed by the States, such as the sales tax on gasoline.

"Repeatedly during the conference the importance of keeping the taxes down to a reasonbale amount was stressed," Henry W. Toll, State Senator from Colorado and secretary of the conference explained.

"For the Federal Government," he added, "to proceed on the basis of getting all it can and for the States to assess their taxes on the same basis would simply be inviting the bootlegger to stay."

As another way out of the problem created by the threat of double or conflicting taxation, the group discussed the Rockefeller plan for distribution. It was contended at the meeting, Mr. Toll said, that adoption of this plan would not only provide effective control, but would "eliminate profits by retailers and dispensers, and in lieu of taxation would afford States direct revenue."

Mrs. Ickes at Session.

The group included Senator Seabury C. Mastick and Tax Commissioner Mark Graves, New York; William B. Belknap, Kentucky; R. Beverly Herbert, South Carolina; Mrs. Anna Wilmarth Ickes, wife of the Secretary of the Interior, Illinois; C. H. Morrissett, Virginia; Senator Ben G. O'Neal, Texas; Estes Snedecor, Oregon; Philip Sterling, Pennsylvania, and Earl R. Lewis, Clarence Heer, D. J. Dunsett, Richard S. Douglas and Herman L. Dail, all from Ohio.

Recommendations will be drafted by the group and in addition to being sent to State Legislatures will be laid before President Roosevelt for his guidance when he meets again early this week with his interdepartmental liquor committee to discuss steps of the Federal Government in controlling and taxing the liquor industry.

Since there is nothing he can do about it until Congress meets in January, the President has deferred consideration of liquor taxes. The Federal Government, however, wants to obtain between $500,000,000 and $700,000,000 annually from liquor taxes. The belief prevails in some quarters that this would be impossible with the present tax of $1.10 on a gallon of whisky. A tax of between $2 and $3 a gallon has been suggested.

Hull Leaves Soviet Trade Issue 'In Air'

country, she can do business with that country. It does not much matter what that country's currency elects to do in the international exchanges.

A Moscow authority recently set up $100,000,000 as the amount the U. S. S. R. could easily spend in the United States in 1934. Similar sums could and probably would be spent in ensuing years if credits existed,—and credits will exist.

If Russia wanted to pay for orders of this size in cash, she could,— though it would take about all her annual cash income from sources other than exports. She naturally will want to pay a very substantial amount in goods and save her cash hoard for use where she can not swap.

May Be Like London.

Montevideo may prove about like London. The American domestic program of price raising makes recoprocal trade agreements and lower tariffs temporarily impossible.

Throughout Hull's tenure of office he has sought consistently to improve foreign relations with the definite aim of paving the way for trade and prosperity. Outstanding example of this is the Cuban policy; every effort has been and is being made to avoid offending Latin-America.

Ironically, the United States is forced to go to Montevideo offering improved communications in place of business. But as one Latin-American diplomat said recently in commenting on the proposed Pan-American highway: "We are not interested in a one-way street."

Undoubtedly the American delegation to Montevideo will have its hands full trying to be cordial and vague as to details at the same time. One of the members of the party announced solemnly:

"We go to Montevideo firmly committed to a policy of good neighbors."

people took a fling at a holiday group back in the Revolutionary War days." He referred to the Boston tea party.

"Wallace didn't mention the cost of production, the vital part of the farm holiday program," Reno added. "He did not mention foreclosures of thousands of farm mortgages, which the Des Moines governors conference recognized as necessitating immediate action.

"It is exactly the same sophistry Wallace has passed out ever since he became Secretary of Agriculture, and even before," he said.

Recalls Dismal Start.

The Secretary said in part:

The United States declared war on the farm depression on May 12 of this year. That was just six months ago tomorrow.

As we checked over the supplies on hand, as we saw the prospects for new crops, it seemed last May that, unless emergency measures measures were taken, the new wheat crop would sell for 30 cents or less; the new corn crop for 20 cents or less and the new pig crop for $2 a hundred or less.

The problem was further complicated by the fact that our foreign trade in farm products was getting smaller and that the buying power of our distressed workers was still low.

Yet, as we worked, the pigs were getting fat, the wheat was growing, the corn was sprouting; the whole great agricultural manufacturing system was at work to crash down on the market with a new burden.

Cites Prices Now.

What happened? We know that corn, instead of being 10 cents on the farm, is 30 cents on the farm and that farmers who need cash can soon get loans of 45 cents a bushel on the farm. We know that wheat instead of being 30 cents a bushel on the farm is 70 cents. We know that hogs, instead of being $2 a hundred. are around $3.50 on the farm.

Instead of sliding down the hill farther, we have turned around and are climbing back up. Farm prices, although still far under what they should be and what you and I can cooperate to make them, are higher than they were a year ago. They are tremendously higher than they promised to be six months ago, when the agricultural adjustment act passed.

The fact is, however, that the improvement has not been uniform. In some localities it has not been great enough to prevent acute distress. The stirirng change for the better that has taken place in many parts of the Nation has not yet reached the heart of the country. The corn belt is still in the valley of the shadow.

Sore Spot of Nation.

Today the corn belt is the sore spot of the Nation. There is distress and there is misery here. You know, quite as well as I do, why this is so. It is not because of anything we have done or have failed to do since March; it is because of things that were done and undone during the past 12 years.

Once again the corn belt seems to be at a cross-roads. There are at least three paths that farmers may take. A choice has to be made, now. I conceive it my duty to present those alternatives. In doing so I shall speak with the utmost frankness.

There is the path of immediate price-fixing, as advocated by the five Midwestern governors, who recently visited us in Washington; there is the trail already blazed by the cotton and tobacco farmers of the South and the wheat farmers of the West; or, finally, there is the opportunity to join the holiday movement and raise hell.

Refused to Quash Revolt.

I have been neither surprised nor shocked by the revolt of the holiday folks. It is true that I have never seen eye to eye with the leaders of the movement, but when it has been suggested that the great powers of the Federal Government might be used in subterranean ways to disrupt the movement, I have insisted that the best way to stop this kind of ruckus is to get more money into the farmers' hands. The holiday movement is like the nerve to an aching tooth. You deaden the nerve only as a last resort. Meanwhile, it tells us just where and how serious the ache is.

But when you have said that, I am afraid you have said all that can be said for such a movement. Violence, destruction of property and bloodshed solve no problems. The statement of the leaders deploring such violence come a little late and are of very little use in mending broken heads. You can't get more of the consumer's dollar by keeping milk away from his children, and you certainly don't endear him to the cause of the farmer.

Warns of Reaction.

In the last few months I believe city people have acquired a new sympathy for the farmers' battle for justice, but let a few more buildings be destroyed, a few more heads cracked, and a few more milk trucks upset, and I greatly fear the reaction among consumers will be anything but helpful to farmers generally.

It so happens we have in the White House a man who believes in the farmer. Never have the farmers of the United States had a President who knew as much about farming or who was as sympathetic to their cause.

Never have there been in the Department of Agriculture so many people willing to work 12 or 15 hours a day, week after week, in an effort to bring "equality to agriculture" at the earliest possible moment. Things which in former administrations would take four years of battling to accomplish can now be put through in the course of a half hour's conversation.

Sees Danger of Abuse.

The danger is that the extraordinary sympathy which all of us have for agriculture may be abused. Certain reactionary groups, I have been told, would like to see that happen so that they might get back into power. While any open alliance between a suave, powerful reactionary group and a misery-ridden, desperate farm group is inconceivable, nevertheless it is true that politics make strange bedfellows.

If the Administration can be pushed into doing something which ultimately proves to be foolish, the reactionaries can again come into their own. I am here to tell you that the Administration does not "push" that easily.

'I am not suggesting that we discourage criticism. This Administration honestly welcomes intelligent criticism. We never did claim infallibility. Neither are we particularly disturbed by the personal abuse coming from men who have long made discord the basis of a good livelihood. But I am deeply concerned about the people who, in their distress, are following that leadership.

Reviews Governors' Demands.

The governors asked for price-fixing. The pressure of events, they felt, required that, and required it at once. But after they had considered the difficulties of fixing prices at the point asked by the holiday folks, they agreed that there would have to be some practical method of arriving at a fair price. So they substituted fair exchange value, still insisting on the necessity for immediate price-fixing.

I frankly admit I was skeptical, as I always have been of price-fixing plans where there is not an absolute control over supply. Nevertheless, a number of us sat down with the governors to see if we could work out a satisfactory plan.

Their first proposal, therefore, was to control marketing by means of a banner code under the NRA, but enthusiasm for that idea faded away when they learned of the celebrated Huey Long amendment to the National industrial recovery act. This amendment provides that nothing in the NRA shall hamper the farmers' freedom of marketing.

Licensing Then Proposed.

So the governors then proposed a system of compulsory marketing control, giving monthly marketing quotas to every farmer in the United States. And they were willing to back the compulsory marketing system with a system of licensing.

One reason I have come out to Iowa at this time is to discover whether or not the farmers of the corn belt are ready for the imposition of compulsory control both of production and marketing.

If they are, new legislation will be necessary; the existing laws, I am quite convinced, will not permit the methods the governors have in mind.

It would be necessary, apparently, to declare agriculture a public utility, and then to begin the truly staggering task of deciding which farmers should have certificates of public convenience and necessity, of telling American farmers whether or not they would be permitted to farm at all, what crops they might grow, how much they might plant, and how, when, and where they might market them; of requiring from each of the 6,500,000 farmers in the United States detailed periodic reports of receipts and expenditures and inventories; and, finally, of checking up on each of these reports with appropriate frequency.

Offers Alternative.

There is another way. It is not the way of violence, nor is it the way of compulsion. It is the opportunity offered to the farmers of the United States to unite for a planned agriculture in a way that will help both them and the Nation. It is born of the spirit of democracy; the legislation for it already exists, the machinery has been set up, and, best of all, we know that it will work for already it has begun to work in two great sections of the United States.

In the South farmers have united in an extraordinary effort to raise prices by adjusting their production. They have succeeded. Cotton today is commanding twice the price it brought last winter. Tobacco is up. And in keeping with the Government's contract, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has put millions of dollars into the hands of those growers who cooperated.

Effect Electrifying.

The effect has been electrifying. From every part of that region comes the word that the growers, the business men, and everybody else has taken a new lease on life. Farmers have money to spend for the first time in many months, and they are spending it. The circuit flow of prosperity seems to be beginning down there.

The wheat growers of the Nation have likewise completed the first stage of their campaign to raise prices by adjusting the supply to the market that actually exists. Benefit payments to compensate them for their sacrifices are at this moment coming out of Washington We hope that the first payments will be in the hands of all the 550,000 cooperating growers before Christmas.

I have been speaking of the wheat grower, the cotton and the tobacco grower. What of the corn grower and the hog producer? Two or three months from now I believe it will be possible to say the same things about the corn country, if the people here wish it to be so.

The possibilities are contained in at least two major activities of the Roosevelt Administration. The corn-hog program, which I shall present to you tonight, is one; monetary action is the other. It might be appropriate first to consider the possibilities in the Administration's monetary policy.

Regrets Slow Results.

Unfortunately, this type of inflation seems to have a rather slow effect on those products of which the domestic consumption is much more important than the foreign. This is true especially of dairy and live stock products. In the long run, increasing the price of gold should affect these products, too, but for an immediate effect on them it may be necessary to increase, quickly and materially, the purchasing power of the people who consume these products. In other words, industrial pay rolls must be increased; more men must be put to work at living wages.

Where will the money for these increased pay rolls come from? If private catpital declines to provide it, the Government will have to. This can be done under existing law, and on Wednesday last the President announced that the Government is prepared to move in that direction by taking 4,000,000 persons off the public relief rolls and giving them jobs. This is the kind of controlled inflation that takes hold at the grass roots. If further direct action by the Federal Government is necessary, I have no doubt that the President will take it.

Points to Market Killing.

We have read this week of how a famous speculator managed a stock trading syndicate for a few friends and of how in less than a year they made a profit of $12,000,000—without having invested one red cent of their own money. With millions in want, is it any wonder that the people of America are against that sort of thing? Is it surprising that they question the impartiality and the wisdom of the advice that these speculators hand out?

It would be interesting, if there were time, to recall some of the things this speculative gentleman said about farmers, Government interference in business and the Department of Agriculture in some articles that appeared last year. He seemed to think it a shocking thing for Government to try, directly or indirectly, to prevent him from making just as many millions of dollars as he wanted to, and he seemed to think it equally shocking for Government to try to help farmers make a decent living.

Agitators Assailed.

I don't suppose some of those who are clamoring for 90-cent corn and $11 hogs by no later than 8 o'clock tomorrow morning will like this program either. I have a strong suspicion, however, that some of the boys who make the most noise would be the least satisfied if they did, by some miracle, get 90-cent corn and $11 hogs tomorrow. That would merely be the signal to raise the ante some more.

During the eight months of this Administration, we have increased the income of agriculture until it is now going at the rate of about $6,500,000,000 annually and the income of the factory workers until it is now going at the rate of about $6,500,000,000 annually.

It may take several years to get back to the $11,000,000,000 income to which both these groups are entitled and which they must have in order to pay their interest and taxes, and have a reasonable amount left over for decent food, clothing, shelter and amusement. We must get to the $11,000,000,000 just as fast as we can without stubbing our toes and bringing the whole thing down clattering.

U.S. Proposes Tighter Curb On Securities

Banking Committee Head Studies Stringent British Act.

Possibility of bringing the Federal securities act more closely in line with the stringent British companies act is being studied by Chairman Fletcher of the Senate Banking Committee, he disclosed last night.

The British act controls entire management of a company from incorporation to dissolution, with close supervision at every stage and over every transaction.

While such control is in the province of the States, and could not constitutionally be exercised by the Federal Government, Fletcher thinks there are features of the tighter British act that could be incorporated in this country's securities laws.

The Federal Trade Commission has furnished the chairman with comparative data, weighing the relative merits of the two systems, and a recommendation of one of its experts advocating a securities law along British lines.

Speed Sought in Inquiry.

Meanwhile, steps were taken yesterday to speed the Senate Banking Committee's stock market inquiry, with an eye to drafting remedial legislation before Congress convenes in January. Fletcher said the committee hereafter will meet five days a week, instead of four. He called on Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, to dispense with unnecessary detail.

The committee yesterday received a letter from a New York broker suggesting the New York Stock Exchange take corrective steps in revising its rules that would make new legislation unnecessary.

A copy of the letter, which also was sent to President Richard Whitney, of the New York Stock Exchange, will be read into the record when hearings are resumed Tuesday. At that time Harry Sinclair, wealthy oil operator, is expected to testify on his share of $12,000,000 profits from a 1928-29 pool in stock of his Consolidated Oil Corporation.

Directors' Liability Defended.

Liability of directors and officials for mistatements in every stock prospectus filed with the Federal Trade Commission, complained of by some banking houses, was defended as equitable in memoranda received by Senator Fletcher from a Government expert.

In this respect the Federal securities law is no different here than in England, Fletcher was advised.

"The responsibility is simply that which is expected of a careful man in the conduct of his own affairs," the memoranda read.

"He certainly, it would seem, may make use of the work of accountants and other experts. He may, under circumstances, act upon investigation of others, but he can not close his eyes to disagreeable and unfavorable knowledge in the discharge of his duties to a corporation and the public."

Senator Fletcher yesterday was given a gold medal in recognition of his work in the Senate Wall street investigation by the Edward C. Desaussure American Legion Post, of Jacksonville, Fla. The award was made by Austin Williamson, jr., past commander of the post, in the Senate Banking Committee room.

McCarl Bars Boycott on Ford In NRA Fight

Code Violation Must Be Proven by U. S. to Ban Contracts.

out as far as the President's order is concerned.

"The question involved is not one of complying with the code, but of adherence to the President's regulation or violation of it. If McCarl's interpretation interferes with the President's order, it is wrong. The Comptroller General evidently misinterpreted the executive ruling."

Gen. Johnson's insistence that an "affirmative agreement" was required by the President's executive order was puzzling, since no mention is made of it in the order issued August 10. Provisions of the order were contained in specifications quoted in Comptroller General McCarl's ruling, requiring merely that to be eligible for Government contracts, "the contractor shall comply with all provisions of the applicable code of fair competition" for its industry, on the President's Reemployment Agreement.

Several Contracts Involved.

Immediately involved in the complicated controversy are contracts for 1,000 trucks for the Civilian Conservation Corps, purchased through the Agriculture Department, and four cars and six trucks for the Commerce Department. Low bids were submitted by the Motorwest Motor Co., Ford dealer of Bethesda, Md., which protested their threatened exclusion.

Disposing of the question of "affirmative assent" to the automobile code, Comptroller General McCarl ruled:

"There appears nothing in the code for the automobile manufacturing industry nor in the act of June 16, 1933, pursuant to which said code was adopted and approved, to require that persons or firms engaged in the industry sign or otherwise affirmatively signify their assent to the approved code. On the contrary, it seems clear from the plain terms of said act and the procedure under which codes are prepared and approved that no such signing or affirmative assent is necessary."

Continuing his opinion, the Comptroller General held: "The fact that the Ford Fotor Co. may not have signed assent to the code of its industry and indicated that it intends to comply with the provisions of said code seems not controlling here. Until it is established that one subject to a duly approved code of fair competition has violated its provisions, it is to be assumed, as is the rule respecting any law, that the provisions of the code will be duly observed."

Burden of Government.

Thus putting the burden of proof of violation on the Government, McCarl further said, in his letter to the Secretary of Commerce, that Recovery Administrator Johnson reported to him in a letter of November 1 that "he has not been advised of any proved violation" on the part of Ford. While Gen. Johnson has often quoted Edsel Ford as evidence his father did not intend to comply, he has not come to the point of charging any direct violation.

The statement of Edsel Ford was made in Detroit last summer, when Gen. Johnson went to enlist the support of the automobile manufacturers, but recent developments have indicated the Ford company's intention to abide by the code while not signing a certificate of compliance necessary before using the Blue Eagle. In reality, no auto manufacturer has signed the code, but all are believed to have signed the compliance agreements in order to get the benefits of advertising their cooperation.

One explanation for Ford's unwillingness to deal directly with the NRA has been that any affirmative action on his part might later be construed as a waiver of his constitutional rights, preventing court action. Recent statements, such as his attack on the "new prohibition against work in this country," have indicated a lack of sympathy with the recovery program.

Word of the Comtproller General's decision was received at Dearborn with the same silence that greeted Gen. Johnson's offer of an exception to Ford to prevent his current system of lay-offs to bring hours under the automobile code, the Associated Press reported. The ruling bore out a Ford statement last week, in which the company insisted it had to sign nothing to abide by the code.

On one point the Comptroller General upheld the position of Administrator Johnson, backed by the President himself, that a large manufacturer could not "hide behind" a small dealer in obtaining contracts. In ruling the manufacturer must also comply with his code, McCarl upheld again the President's order restricting contracts to promote the NRA.

While no immediate action was taken by the Commerce and Agriculture Departments, it was assumed they would proceed with letting the contracts to the Ford dealer, although the Agriculture Department reserved the right in its specifications to apply delivery conditions to its consideration of bids.

In that Ford has submitted his report of hours and wages at his factories to the automobile code authority, and the Recovery Administration said a cursory examination disclosed them within code provisions, only his handling of labor disputes at Edgewater, N. J., and Chester, Pa., remains before his complete compliance is made definite. Whether he is recognizing collective bargaining, as required, may come before the National Labor Board this week.

Manila, P. I., Nov. 11 (AP).—Quintin Paredes offered his resignation as Speaker of the Philippine House of Representatives today because of bitterness resulting from his unexpected ending of the Legislature.

The caucus did not take immediate action.

Liner Used as Cuban Gunboat Screen Bears Scars of Battle

Moro Castle's Passengers Thrilled by Experience in Havana Harbor.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—The liner Morro Castle arrived from Cuba today bearing scars from rebel guns in the recent fighting at Havana, her 31 passengers still excited over their experience.

Warned that there might be firing on the waterfront, Capt. Joseph E. Jones backed his ship out of its pier nearly two hours before its scheduled sailing time.

As he started moving astern two Cuban gunboats, the Cuba and Patria, maneuvered into such a position that the liner would be between them and the shore. Capt. Jones said they then began firing on the fort adjoining the postoffice dock and continued their fire until the Morro Castle straightened out and headed to sea.

Capt. Jones gave orders to clear the port decks as the ship moved astern. The passengers, however, were constantly appearing on deck, attempting to get pictures of the gunboats. Second Officer John Friedman, on the docking bridge aft, remained at his post until a machine gun bullet ripped off a piece of the bridge. Then he retired.

There followed a barrage of macaine-gun bullets which whistled between the aft stanchions. Midship, on the port side, between four and five machine-gun bullets flattened against the steel bulkheads. As soon as the Morro Castle straightened out and was making speedily for the Narrows, the gunboats ceased firing and began backing out.

"It was nothing very exciting," Capt. Jones said. "The passengers found it so, but I was interested chiefly in what the gunboats were going to do. Clever of them to maneuver so as to make us a screen. We all thought that. I knew they'd want to come out like the very devil as soon as we got under way, so I gave our engines all they'd stand and got away. That's all there's to it."

Miss Gertrude Conlon, of Newark, N. J., a cruise passenger, said, "It was simply terrible, but I loved every moment of it."

Plant Seized In Minnesota; Troops Asked

Sheriff Fears Guerrilla Warfare; Strikers Hold Packing House.

Austin, Minn., Nov. 11 (U.P.). Four companies of National Guardsmen were mobilized tonight and held ready for movement to this strike-torn city, scene of a riot by striking employes of the George A. Hormel Packing Co., who closed the plant, ejected officials and took over the building after a clash with guards.

Austin, Minn., Nov. 11 (AP).—Sheriff Ira Syck tonight appealed to Gov. Floyd B. Olsen for National Guardsmen as striking employes held possession of the George A. Hormel & Co. parking plant after disorders in which three persons were slightly hurt. They suffered bruises and lacerations as officers and strikers clashed during the assault on the plant.

The sheriff, in a message to the governor said, "the situation here is so unruly that deputizing of uninformed and poorly armed citizens would precipitate guerrilla warfare with citizen casualties on both sides."

Governor Sends Envoy.

Gov. Olson conferred later with a delegation of Austin City officials in Minneapolis and then sent Frank Starkey, member of the State Industrial Commission, there to see if the labor difficulty could be settled by arbitration.

Vince Day, secretary to Gov. Olson, said the chief executive awaited a report from Starkey before deciding on further action.

Word was received by the governor that officials of the Hormel plant had notified a secretary to President Roosevelt of the strike action because the Federal Government has approximately 1,000,000 pounds of meat stored in the plant.

Sheriff Disarmed.

Marshall, Minn., Nov. 11 (AP).—Sheriff George A. Cankin, who was disarmed and pulled from an automobile in a farm strike demonstration, said today he expected to ask Gov. Olson to order National Guardsmen into Lyon County.

He said conditions were beyond his control and asserted he lacked a force to handle the situation.

The community was peaceful after the invasion of more than 1,000 farm strikers and sympathizers who took weapons yesterday from the sheriff and his deputies and forced a produce plant to suspend operations. Other such businesses were closed, too, because of the strike.

Wheat Export Plan Resented

West Coast Growers Tell Wallace Marketing of Crop Limited.

Colfax, Wash., Nov. 11 (AP).—Whitman County wheat growers informed Secretary Wallace last night "revolt may follow" unless the Northwest wheat surplus is removed. The Whitman County allotment committee sent the following telegram to the secretary:

"Growers resent the program of the Northwest Wheat Export Corporation. Farmers can sell only a limited amount of wheat, and are unable to meet their payments of interest and taxes unless the Northwest is given the same consideration as is given corn and cotton farmers.

"Revolt may follow.

"Farmers have had promises galore, while their debts continue to mount. Unless something is done soon to improve marketing conditions, confidence in the Administration will be undermined."

The telegram was signed by A. M. Camp, La Crosse, chairman; A. E. Olson, Pullman, and E. C. Huntley, St. John.

The Whitman Farmers Protective Association sent a similar message to Secretary Wallace.

Actress Promises Alienation Fight

Claire Windsor Preparing for Retrial of Suit.

Los Angeles, Nov. 11 (AP).—A fight "until one side or the other is run out of court," was promised today by Claire Windsor, blond film actress, as she prepared for the retrial of the alienation of affections case in which a superior court jury awarded Mrs. Marian Y. Read, Oakland matron, $75,000 damages.

Miss Windsor was granted a new trial Friday by Superior Judge Joseph P. Spoul, who held the verdict was "excessive and unreasonable."

The Oakland woman sued for $100,000, charging the actress with stealing the affections of Mrs. Read's former husband, Alfred C. Read, Oakland broker.

gubernatorial candidate in 1919, filed his papers of candidacy for the party's nomination as governor at Annapolis. Mr. Nice insisted he was in the fight to stay until primary day, at least, and Mr. Hill expressed the same attitude.

Face Bruising Battle.

Thus the Republican party in Maryland is faced with a bruising primary contest, which some of the older leaders fear may lessen its chances in the final contest with the Democrats next November.

The situation is further complicated by the desire of Mayor Walter E. Quenstadt, of Annapolis, a Republican, to enter the contest. Eastern Shore Republicans have suggested Harry T. Phoebus, of Somerset County, as their candidate. But with Mr. Hill's announcement it is expected the battle lines will be drawn between him and Mr. Nice.

For some years the Republican party in Maryland has been in a demoralized condition, due chiefly to factional fighting and adherence to the dry side of the prohibition controversy. Since 1919, when Gov. Albert Cabell Ritchie defeated Mr. Nice by a margin of 165 votes, the former has been the dominant political figure in the State and none has been able to contend successfully against him.

Served Four Terms.

Mr. Ritchie has served continuously for four terms as governor, or for a period of 14 years—with one year more to go. Although the issue of long contiuance in office has been made against him each time he had sought reelection, reports from Maryland indicate that it will be more effective next year than ever before.

But the Republicans are not now basing their hopes for success on that issue—it has been a will o' wisp for them in the last three contests. They are counting on reaction against Gov. Ritchie because of the Maryland bank failures, the recent lynchings and what is contended to be general dissatisfaction with the State's administrative and fiscal policies. Moreover, Gov. Ritchie has lost his best issue—prohibition.

Factional movements also have been gaining strength within the Democratic party. There no longer exists any centralized control of the Democratic organization in Baltimore. There Mayor Howard W. Jackson has aspirations to succeed Gov. Ritchie and is doing all he can to promote his prospects for the party nomination.

Coad Urged to Run.

Dr. Charles H. Conley, of Frederick, is the only announced candidate for the Democratic nomination. But in addition to Mayor Jackson, State Senator J. Allan Coad, of St. Marys County, long hostile to Gov. Ritchie, has been urged to seek the nomination.

Although the governor has not decided whether he will seek reelection, the impression prevails that he will, unless something happens between now and next spring that would tangibly demonstrate a lessening of his prospects. A number of Democrats are urging him to run for the Senate next year, to succeed Senator Phillips Lee Goldsborough, a Republican.

These factors have encouraged the Maryland Republicans to believe they have some chance to elect a governor next year. But a sharp primary fight will reduce that prospect somewhat. Meanwhile it is not clear where Ovington E. Weller, Galen L. Tait, chairman of the Republican State central committee, and Senator Goldsborough stand in this new situation.

Allied With Jackson.

Mr. Hill in the past has been allied with the Republican faction led by William P. Jackson, former National committeeman. Under the wing of that faction in 1926 he challenged the right of Mr. Weller, then in the United States Senate, to a renomination. Mr. Hill lost the fight, but at the time it was believed his antiprohibition views caused his defeat, since most of the Republican party in the Maryland counties has been politically dry.

With prohibition eliminated as a political issue, Mr. Hill decided again to make a State-wide race. In announcing his candidacy he said he would not file his papers until next May and would not start an active campaign until that time. The Maryland primary election will be held in September.

District Food Prices Higher; Others Drop

Slight Increase Shown in Local Stores During 2 Weeks Period.

While retail food prices for the country as a whole continued to decline during the two-week period ended October 24, prices increased slightly in Washington, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday.

The increase in Washington from October 10 to October 24 was two-tenths of 1 per cent. As compared with a year ago, the Washington increase was 7.1 per cent.

The decline for the country was seven-tenths of 1 per cent during the two-week period. However, figures are 18 per cent over the low point reached last April.

The bureau report says the fall in food prices was caused by a general weakening in the average prices of meats and particularly pork and pork products. Among other important items which showed decreases were fresh vegetables and butter. A slight drop was reported in cereals.

The biggest price drop during the period was in Cleveland, where food prices declined 2.9 per cent. Thirty-one of the 51 cities from which reports were gathered showed drops. The biggest gain was at Norfolk, Va., where prices went up 1.5 per cent.

Canned goods and eggs were among the few food products that showed an increase in price for the country as a whole. The biggest drop, 8 per cent, was in the price of potatoes.

whole United States alien code," Chairman Dickstein told The Post. "There is too much red tape in the code at present. As it now operates, even aliens plotting the overthrow of this Government have ample time to get out of the country before the Government takes action."

He declined to give the names of other witnesses called by the committee, declaring he feared harm might come to them if their names were published.

Plans Mapped Tomorrow.

Chairman Dickstein plans to call his subcommittee together in brief executive session tomorrow when the course of the inquiry will be mapped, but formal public hearings will not begin until Tuesday.

The purpose of the inquiry as originally announced last month is to investigate public lectures, distribution of Nazi literature and activities tending to spread "hatred, bigotry and internal disturbances" in this country.

Dickstein said the hearings will continue through the opening of Congress and should end in legislation tightening the present alien laws.

"In Germany we could not get away with 1 per cent of the things alien Germans get away with here," he asserted last night.

Serving on the subcommittee are Representatives Kerr, North Carolina; Underwood, Ohio; Crowe, Indiana; Dies, Texas; Kramer, California, all Democrats, and Dirksen, Illinois; Taylor, Tennessee, and Focht, Pennsylvania, Republicans.

Homage Paid Soldier's Tomb By President

Armistice Day Ceremony Symbolizes Nation's Reverence.

Consecrated silence flashed around the world yesterday with the sun, as clocks of many nations chimed 11.

When that hour reached the wind-swept hills of Arlington, it found the President of the United States before the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier with bowed and bared head.

With the President's silent tribute and his wreath of pink chrysanthemums were symbolized the entire Nation's observance of the fifteenth anniversary of the armistice.

Earlier in the day the sun had brought the hour to London, to Paris, to Rome, and other capitals where the dead of the Great War are mourned.

Taps sounded by an Army bugler and the Presidential party left the facade before the white marble tomb. The ceremony was over.

Mrs. Roosevelt Takes Part.

The wreath of the President was placed by his naval aid, Capt. Walter N. Vernou. Mrs. Roosevelt laid yellow blossoms beside it.

Both the Chief Executive and the First Lady wore forget-me-nots presented by the Disabled American Veterans.

Washington officialdom stood back during the ceremony at the tomb. Many officials, diplomats and high ranking Army and Navy officers remained for the American Legion service which followed in the amphitheater.

Later in the day at Washington Cathedral a service was held at the tomb of President Woodrow Wilson.

The observance was joined by the Canadian Legation staff headed by William Duncan Herridge in the laying of a wreath at the "Cross of Sacrifice" at Arlington.

Heroic Spirit Needed Now.

Britain's service was brought in part to Washington in the observance aboard the British cruiser Danae at the Navy Yard.

The spirit of the Unknown Soldier is needed in the present-day fight for recovery, Edward A. Hayes, national commander, said at the legion's service.

"If the Unknown Soldier were brought back to life, he would devote his entire energies at this time in cooperating with the NRA," Hayes said.

"He would insist upon a sound American dollar. He would help us exclude the aliens who would overthrow our Government, and assist us in devising plans to perform our duty and curb crime."

Dern Tells of Advance.

Paying tribute to the "new leadership," Secretary of War Dern told those assembled at the Amphitheater that under it there has come:

"A real desire of the overwhelming majority of our citizens to advance into the new frontier of wealth equitably controlled and distributed in the interests of society."

"We are going forward," he said, "under a leadership which believes in the American dream, which has made it again articulate and brings to its service high courage and resourcefulness."

With Armistice Day the Veterans of Foreign Wars began a membership drive "in preparation for the veterans' fight against the economy act when the new Congress convenes."

The service was called to order by Rice W. Means, Legion District Commander. Invocation and benediction was brought by Rev. Robert J. White, National chaplain.

Miss Jessica Dragonette sang the National Anthem and Taps with the United States Marine Band. Mrs. William H. Buester, Legion Auxiliary president, spoke.

Veterans Hold Carnival.

Two great carnivals last night echoed the jubilee spirit of the first armistice. One was that of the Legion at the Mayflower Hotel and the other the Veterans of Foreign Wars party at the Shoreham Hotel.

Again conspicuous at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier were a young man and woman who stood all morning in silence in a plea for world peace.

A wreath symbolizing this peace desire was placed by Miss Mary Moore Miller, vice chairman of the Washington Youth Peace Council.

The seven welfare groups which cared for the doughboys in France also laid their tribute at the marble-topped grave.

They were the Y. W. C. A., Y. M. C. A., Salvation Army, War Camp Community Service, War Council of the Knights of Columbus, Jewish Welfare Board and the American Library Association. The Red Cross also paid its tribute.

Service Held at Hospital.

At Walter Reed Hospital rites were held in the new Memorial Chapel in honor of World War dead. This was the first public service to be held at the chapel. The Most Rev. John McNamara, auxiliary bishop of Baltimore, conducted a solemn Armistice Day mass.

The ceremonies were arranged by Fort Stevens Post of the American Legion. Capt. Joseph R. Koch, Army chaplain, assisted in the religious service. The choir of Atonement Seminary, Catholic University, sang.

Among the many simple rites at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier was that of the Military Order of the World War. National Commander George E. Ijams placed the wreath.

A wreath was laid by Mrs. Ben H. Fuller, wife of the commandant of Marines, in the name of the American Women's Legion. She is president. Employes of the Veterans' Administration also placed wreaths.

A delegation representing the Disabled American Veterans, headed by Joseph A. Ashi, State commander, left a garland of flowers.

Members of the Washington High School Cadet Corps placed two wreaths at the Unknown's Tomb—one for the five local white high schools and the other on behalf of the school at Jamaica Plains, Mass. Dr. Stephen E. Kramer, assistant superintendent of District schools, accompanied the cadets.

Many other groups, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, and a number of local civic bodies also left floral tributes.

A Pageant of States.

The American Legion ball at the Mayflower was sponsored by a group of Army and Navy debutantes, headed by Miss Bety Dern, daughter of the Secretary of War.

A feature was a pageant of the States presented by the following young women:

Misses Ruth Mills, Betty Morris, Arline Callahan, Virginia Lang, Ruth B. Conroy, Frances Zebley, Audrey Reymond, Julia Obear, Elelyn Denny.

Misses Beulah Woodruff, Iona Walters, Jane Ramseyer, Betty Eicher, Ida Lee Crain, Julia Koester, Cecelia Schnurr, Rosalie Allen, Edith Michand, Josephine Minardo, M. Elkowir, Catherine Harrison, Betty Whitfueld, Grace L. Newton, Gertrude Rikala, Katherine and Agatha Pfeiffer, Loraine Hatch, Ruby Streeter, Louise Rupp, Yemelda Chavez, Irene Roehlert, Reba Doughton.

Misses Julia Brainard, Dorothy Porter, Ruth Lacknen, Leah Stewart, Betty Agnes, Florence Morin, Florence Brown, Myra Hall, Rebecca Johnson, Kathryn Donohue, Margaret Roberts, Daphne Anderson, Rachel Miller, Grace Chapman and Grace Dils.

Both the Legion and the V. F. W. functions had the President and Mrs. Rosevelt at the head of the list of their patrons and patronesses. Proceeds will go for the relief of needy veterans.

The Elks Boys Band gave an Armistice Day concert last night before 1,500 persons in the Elks Club, 919 H street northwest, under direction of James L. Kidwell. The music was arranged by Lawrence Leer, assistant conductor. The concert was the first of a winter series.

Politicians Warned Of Unwise Savings

Schools Often Bear Brunt, Declares Prof. Reed.

Atlantic City, N. J., Nov. 11 (AP).—Prof. Thomas H. Reed, of the University of Michigan, warned today against slashing of budgets without regard to the need of services being thus curtailed.

In a discussion before the National Conference on Government, Prof. Reed said "the desire of politicians is to secure economy in the easiest way."

"For example," he went on, "You can economize more quickly on schools, because they require the largest item of expenditure. Politicians follow the line of least resistance."

Davis Favors Rum Sale by the Glass

Moose Head Says Quart Is Too Much at Once.

Erie, Pa., Nov. 11 (AP).—Asserting that "a quart is almost too much to be distributed at once," United States Senator James J. Davis says he believes it would be best to sell liquor "by the drink."

In Erie for a meeting of the Loyal Order of Moose, of which he is head, Davis last night advocated a uniform liquor control law for all States, pattened after the licensing-by-the-courts act in force in Pennsylvania before prohibition.

He said it would be futile to have a "package law" distribution of liquor through State stores.

Austria Ready To Hang Foes Of Chancellor

Gallows Built as Martial Law Rules Country; Nazis Warned.

Vienna, Nov. 11 (AP).—The thump-thump of hammers resounded in the gloomy courtyard of old Vienna's District Jail today as carpenters built a gallows for offenders against Chancellor Englebert Dollfuss' new martial law decree.

The gaunt scaffold, standing where there has not been an execution for almost 20 years, emphasized the Government's description of the new order of things as "a new martial law."

The noise of the hammers replaced what otherwise might have been merry-making attending a celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the founding of the Austrian republic tomororw.

Warning to Nazis

It was to prevent violence in connection with the anniversary observance by Socialists or Nazis that martial law was decreed with violence or inciting to violence punishable by death.

But almost simultaneously with the publication of the decree unidentified men killed a Home Guard Auxiliary Policeman in Lochau and wounded his companion, and a bomb wrecked the home of a member of the Vorarlberg Provincial Diet.

At Vorarlberg the director of security moved swiftly to announce the closing of the Austro-German border for all but properly identified Germans and to ban all public festivities in border towns.

Police Patrol Vienna.

In Vienna thousands of federal policemen guarded against Socialist attempts to stage an antigovernment demonstration today on the fifteenth anniversary of the death of Victor Adler, father of Austrian Socialism.

Offenders against the antiviolence decree—which covers all Austria—will be tried by civilians and hanged by civilians, but the procedure must be carried out with military speed and the doomed must die within two hours after the sentences.

Thorning Raps Lust for War At Immaculata

Professor in Symposium on Peace Flays Men Who Seek Profit.

The promotion of ill-will among nations and the lust for personal gain from international hate were flayed by the Rev. Joseph A. Thorning, S. J., speaking at Armistice Day services at the International Symposium of Peace in Immaculata Seminary.

"It is vain to boast of great buildings and bridges, swift and luxurious means of transportation while we are helpless to check the greedy makers of munitions from battening on the tears of women and the blood of men," declared Father Thorning, professor of sociology at Georgetown University.

The symposium was under auspices of the International Relations Club of Immaculata Seminary, and was attended by a large audience including members of the diplomatic corps, Federal officials and educators.

Miss Ruth Simon, president of the club, introduced the speakers, who represented various countries.

Dr. Angel Cabrillo Vasquez, of Catholic University, represented Spain; Dr. Andre Beneteau, of Catholic University, represented France; Senor Domingo Caino, of Georgetown University, represented Italy, and Dr. Anton Lange, of the Georgetown faculty, represented Germany.

Other speakers included Jerome Downey, of Georgetown University; John Stunkard, of Catholic University; Richard Warner, of George Washington University, and Earl Kernahan, of American University.

The Immaculata Glee Club sang songs of the different nations represented.

Preceding the symposium was a discussion of peace among the club members, directed by Miss Virginia Jane Blake and Miss Martha Jane Drennnan.

Legion Leader Sees Russian Peril for U. S.

Raps Recognition Because of Soviet Stand on "Family Life."

Cleveland, Nov. 11 (AP).—Reaffirming the stand taken by the American Legion Convention at Chicago last month, National Commander Edward A. Hayes tonight said he opposed recognition of the Soviet Union because Communists want to "destroy our family life."

He delivered an Armistice Day address before Legionnaires.

"When people come into our Nation, insulting the members of the families which make up our Nation, advocating overthrow of the form of government under which we live, I say the American Legion is opposed to the recognition of those people," he said.

With equal energy the National commander reviewed requests of the legion for additional aid for World War veterans needing hospitalization and for the families of those killed in the conflict. He expressed wonder that Americans do not celebrate Armistice Day with enthusiasm displayed in 1918.

His demands for Governmental help for veterans he placed in four categories.

"There must be an immediate restoration of the payments made for line-of-duty compensation status as they were in existence prior to March 20, 1933," he said.

"The widows and orphans of war veterans are in need of our assistance * * * we are going to insist that the widows and orphans of those men who have died shall never be without the protection of the Government."

Other parts of the address called for "a sound American dollar" and adequate National defense. He asserted the strength of the Navy should be built up to the London Naval Treaty provisions and the Army to the point prescribed by the amended National defense act of 1920.

Payne Praises War President At Annual Rites

He Voiced Convictions of Nation for Freedom, Says Speaker.

"The voice of Woodrow Wilson was the inspired voice of the Nation and his masterly statement of the principles of freedom, of justice and of right for which the United States stood, voiced the convictions of the people of the United States," declared John Barton Payne, chairman of the American Red Cross, in an address at the commemoration service held at the tomb of the World War President in Bethlehem Chapel of Washington Cathedral yesterday afternoon.

In the congregation was Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. President Roosevelt was unable to attend but his family was represented by his uncle, Frederic W. Delano, who placed a wreath on Wilson's tomb in behalf of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

The service was sponsored by the Woodrow Wilson Armistice Day committee of the District of Columbia.

The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. G. Freeland Peter, chancellor of Washington Cathedral, assisted by Canon Raymond L. Wolven, Bishop Freeman's chaplain, and the Rev. Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, also a canon. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. James H. Taylor, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church. Patriotic hymns were sung by the Cathedral Choir of Men and Boys.

Among others who placed wreaths were Charles S. Hamlin, former head of the Federal Reserve for the Woodrow Wilson Foundation; Col. J. T. Taylor, for the National officers of the American Legion; Senator Rice W. Means, for the D. C. Department of the American Legion, and Commander James Van Zandt, representional National officers of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, all led by Fitz Woodrow, 4, cousin of the late President.

World War veterans from Walter Reed and the Naval Hospitals, many disabled, came to pay tribute.

A choral evensong of commemoration for all who lost their lives in service was held in the Great Choir and Sanctuary of Washington Cathedral at 4 p. m. by the Rev. Dr. William L. DeVries, precentor of Washington Cathedral.

British Police Win Antiwar Clash

Students' Heads Cracked in Cambridge Fight.

Cambridge, England, Nov. 11 (U.P.). Town and gown staged an old-time battle today, when Cambridge police tried to break up an antiwar demonstration by university students, and were forced to use hardwood truncheons on the skulls of the more militaristic scholars.

A delegation of students attempted to place a wreath on the Cambridge Cenotaph addressed "to the dead and wounded of all nations—victims of war they did make—from those who are determined to prevent all similar crimes."

The militarists pelted the pacifists with dead rats and fish. The town police intervented.

The police won.

Body of Woman, Weighted, Found

Fairhaven, M[illegible]., Nov. 11 (AP).—The body of a well-dressed woman, about 70, was found on jagged rocks near the ocean today under circumstances which led authorities to order an autopsy.

The name and address of Mrs. Lizzie W. Gardner, 717 Eighth street, Coronado, Calif., was found in the woman's handbag, which was weighted down with a flatiron and tied about her neck. The body had not been in the water. Officials believe she was killed after falling among the rocks.

Col. Lindbergh Quits Geneva, Flies to Spain

Warmly Welcomed With Wife at Biscay Bay Fishing Village.

Madrid, Nov. 11 (AP).—Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh flying from Geneva, arrived this afternoon at Santona, 16 miles from Santander on the Bay of Biscay.

The Lindbergh plane arrived over the City of Santona at 4:45 p. m., then circled for more than three-quarters of an hour attempting to find a smooth stretch of water on which to make a landing.

Finally the ship swooped down through the dense fog which overhung the town and landed safely.

Lindbergh left the plane some distance out and went ashore himself in a launch, leaving Mrs. Lindbergh at the controls. Soon she taxied the plane close to the shore, where it was anchored.

City officials welcomed the Lindberghs warmly and escorted them to the residence of Jose Albo, one of the wealthiest men in northern Spain.

At first the Lindberghs could not find an interpreter in the fishing village of 4,000 inhabitants, but eventually the difficulty was overcome.

Phone Alexandria 523.

National Commander Edward A. Hayes of the American Legion yesterday afternoon addressed legionnaires and their friends at the formal presentation to Alexandria Post, No. 24, of a flag and staff, placed in historic Gadsby's Tavern, Alexandria, as the gift of the school children of Alexandria.

Commander Hayes urged his hearers to carefully study the question of recognition of Russia before reaching a decision.

Commander Hannon E. Norris of Post No. 24, presided, and invocation was by the Rev. Norris A. Lineweaver, chaplain. Several hundred school children sang patriotic songs, in charge of Miss Christine Munoz, director of music in the public schools. Music was by the Citizens' Band and the American Legion Drum and Bugle Corps, and benediction by the Very Rev. Thomas A. Rankin, pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church.

The formal presentation of the flag and staff, on behalf of the schools, was made by Miss Nancy Washington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Selden Washington, and John Augustine Washington, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Blackburn Washington. Both wore colonial costume. They are grandchildren of Lawrence Washington, the last male member of the Washington family born at Mount Vernon.

The exercises closed with the pledge to the flag, led by Mrs. Frank Thomas, and the playing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

The formal exercises were followed by a luncheon at the George Mason Hotel, honoring Commander Hayes. Commander Norris introduced Dan S. Hollenga, a member of the Americanism committee, who presented the following guests: Brig. Gen. Harry Lee, commandant of the Marine Base at Quantico; Gen. Community Chest Need Unrelated to U. S. Fund

Any belief that Federal relief funds eliminate the need for Community Chest operations is a "misapprehension," George S. Wilson, director of the District Board of Public Welfare, declared in an address broadcast last night.

After describing the function of the Board of Public Welfare, Mr. Wilson pointed out that there are "many helpless people in every community who are unable to work even if they had the opportunity." Federal funds are for unemployment relief, he indicated, while those in the other category must lean on the Community Chest for help.

Hull to Press Pan-American Unity in Parley

Secretary Tells Hopes on Leaving With Wife for Montevideo.

Secretary and Mrs. Hull left Washington yesterday morning, bound for Montevideo and the Pan-American Conference. They will be gone about two months.

The Secretary was the only one of six delegates to leave from Washington. Three others joined the chairman in New York aboard the steamship American Legion, which sailed in midafternoon; the other two are already in South America.

No comment on his mission was made by the Secretary at the station, where several State Department men gathered to bid him farewell. Smiling, he pointed out that summer was just beginning in Montevideo.

Outlines His Hopes.

Just before his ship sailed, Hull outlined his hopes again, saying, according to the Associated Press, that the delegation was going in the spirit of "a new order calling for orderly, mutual efforts."

"Continents, no more than nations, can longer engage in helter-skelter economics," he continued.

Referring to tariff and monetary matters, the Secretary said:

"In seeking to put into practical operation President Roosevelt's good-neighbor policy, we are adopting also his rule of first things first.

"If, at Montevideo, we can deal soundly with some of the basic problems of good relations, we shall be laying the groundwork for permanent achievement. We shall attempt, therefore, to do the things that can most intelligently be done in a time of unsettled conditions. In this way, we hope to build for the future.

"A more substantial step forward in Pan-American unity can and, I believe, will be taken at Montevideo than all others within two decades," the Secretary concluded.

Armistice Urged.

One of the last communications Hull received before leaving the country came from the committee on Latin-American policy which urged an immediate armistice between Bolivia and Paraguay and the strengthening of the peace machinery on the American continents.

The committee, composed of 14 publishers and educators and headed by William Allen White, was set up by the Foreign Policy Association. It included a four-point program in its recommendations to Secretary Hull.

1. A nonaggression pact based on the principle set forth by the President in his disarmament message last May.
2. Agreement for limited sanctions in case an American state resorts to the use of force in violation of its obligations.
3. Continentalizing of the Monroe Doctrine.
4. Establishment of machinery for peaceful settlement of disputes.

Extension of Credit Held Vital In U. S.-Soviet Trade Relations

Lorwin Reviews Economic Possibilities in Russian Recognition.

By Lewis L. Lorwin,
Of the Brookings Institution.

Discussions aroused by the visit of Maxim Litvinoff to Washigton focus on the economic rather than the political significance of Russian recognition. The development is being presented to the American people primarily as another, and important, step in the evolution of the recovery program.

No one can minimize the importance of any step that may lead toward business revival. But neither should we allow ourselves anticipations which may end in disillusionment. In forecasting the economic possibilities of Russian recognition, it is important to realize the conditions necessary for successful development of American-Soviet commercial relations.

Past Trade With Russia.

In the past Russia and the United States have not had extensive trade relations. From 1910 to 1914, American exports to Russia averaged about $25,000,000 per year, representing a little over 1 per cent of our total exports. Our imports from Russia during the same period were approximately $21,000,000 annually, also only a tiny fraction of our total imports.

During 1926-30 our annual exports to Russia averaged $75,600,000. During 1930 and 1931, owing to exceptional conditions, our exports to Russia reached really high figures —$114,398,000 and $103,716,000, respectively, being 3.0 and 4.2 per cent of our total exports. In 1932, exports to the Sovjet Union dropped sharply to $12,640,000 and imports thence fell to $9,735,000. During 1933 Russo-American trade has continued to be of relatively trivial commercial importance.

More important reasons for the small trade between the United States and the Soviet Union have been the undeveloped economic condition of the latter, her low standard of living, and our unpreparedness to finance large-scale trade with Russia.

Commercial Needs.

The prospects depend on our capacity and willingness to remedy these conditions. On the basis of mutual needs, trade between the United States and the Soviet Union has large potentialities of development. The Soviet Union suffers from a general scarcity, while we confront an alleged general overproduction. Russia would be glad to purchase large quantities of raw materials such as cotton and copper, of capital goods such as tools and machinery, and even of finished consumers' products, such as textiles.

On the other hand, many of our languishing industries—those making machine tools, automobile parts, railroad equipment, iron and steel products—see in the Russian market their best immediate chance for revival. We could also dispose of surplus cotton, hogs and livestock by replenishing the low agricultural supplies of Russia.

But Russia's needs and our surplus do not answer the question of how increased purchases from us can be financed.

How Can Russia Pay?

It is clear that the Soviet Union can not pay us immediately in commodities. Already we export to Russia more than we import thence. In 1930 and 1931, when our trade with Russia was largest, we exported to the amount of 218 million dollars for the two years, and imported frm Russia goods valued only at about $37,500,000.

We may assume that we shall not repeat our foreign loan debauch of predepression days. Aside from this method, however, there are three ways in which Russia could cover an unfavorable trade balance with us. She might increase her exports to other countries, obtain foreign exchange from them, and transfer such exchange to the United States. She might export gold and other precious metals to us. And she might meet her obligations through credit arrangements enabling payments to be spread over a period of years.

Necessity of Credits.

The chief promise for a rapid expansion of American-Soviet economic relations thus lies in the possibility of credit expansion.

It is argued that if large enough credits are extended to Russia, she could speed up production so as to increase her export surplus as well as her gold output, and thus be able to make substantial payments to us. If, at the same time, we extend some of our loans over a period of 5 to 10 years, we would enable Russia to meet the charges on a larger foreign debt than would otherwise be possible.

It has been suggested that in financing our trade with the Soviet Union we follow the example of European countries, which guarantee from 60 to 75 per cent of the credits advanced by exporters to the Soviet buyers. These credits run from eighteen months to about four years. It is proposed that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should serve as the agency for the purpose, advancing 60 per cent of the amount of Russian purchases, while private business carries the remainder.

World Economic Policy.

Another element in the situation, however, must not be overlooked. If Russia is to repay American credits, she must sooner or later develop an export surplus and find a market for it. It will be up to us either to allow Russia to expand her imports here or else to open our doors wider to those countries which buy from Russia. The issue is not entirely a question of Russia's capacity or willingness to pay. It is also a question of our commercial policy; of the extent to which we are willing to open our markets to world trade.

During the present stage of world history the United States can do for Russia what western Europe did for the United States during the second half of the nineteenth century. It can supply the capital and technical knowledge for building a great industrial civilization out of a backward agrarian nation.

NRA Divided On Price Fixing By Cleaners

Consumer Left Open to Exploitation, Advisory Board Charges.

Dissension within the NRA on the price-fixing clause of the cleaners' and dyers' code developed yesterday as members of the NRA consumers' advisory board declared it opened the door to exploitation of consumers and means similar provisions will be included in future service industry codes if the public permits.

If the clause fulfills its aim, NRA officials said, there is a possibility it might be extended to cover the pending laundry code.

They emphatically denied, however, there was any intention to gouge the consumer and most emphatic in this was H. B. Ludlom, a deputy administrator, who conducted hearings on the code.

Denies Price Setup.

"This is not price-fixing in the usually accepted sense, for we will not permit the establishment of any prices which contain a profit element," he said. "The sole purpose of the price-control clause is to enable the cleaner to give his employes a living wage. The owner of the plant has nothing to offer for sale but services. Therefore, when such things as plant equipment and other overhead expenses are accounted for, his only way of underselling a competitor is to take the reduction out of his employe's pocket by paying him smaller wages and working him longer hours.

"This cut-throat competition and the sweating of labor had gone to such lengths that it was necessary to attempt to save the laboring man. The only way was to permit the fixing of minimum prices—in cases where that was justified—in order to provide a legitimate wage and decent working conditions.

"We shall permit no price-fixing above that point, and there shall be no gouging in Washington or any other city, where local boards of the industry may feel price-fixing is necessary."

With this came a blast from the American Home Economics Association, declaring the code framers spurned provisions offered by it and the Consumers' Advisory Board to protect the public, yet wrote in the price-fixing clauses over the board's "strong opposition."

$1.50 Price Scouted.

One of the principal objections from the consumer's point of view was the fear the cost of cleaning a suit might soar to $1.50. This price was contained in Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson's report on the code to President Roosevelt and was portrayed as the "normal" price for cleaning in an NRA announcement stating the code had been approved.

It does not follow, however, that the NRA will permit the fixing of a $1.50 price at the present time, it was explained by NRA officials yesterday after they had been flooded with protests from the public.

U. S. and Latin Bank Tie-Up Plan Revealed

Hull Reported Ready to Indorse Proposal in Montevideo.

(Copyright, 1933, by the Associated Press.)

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—Through diplomatic channels came word today that a proposal to link the Federal Reserve Bank of the United States with the national banks of Latin-American nations is under consideration, as Secretary of State Hull sails for Montevideo to the Pan-American Conference.

From these sources it was learned that the establishment of an Inter-American Investment Bureau to solve the economic problems of the Americas was undergoing an intense study in Latin-America, and that, apparently, the project had sympathetic support of the Administration in Washington.

Secretary Hull was said to be fully aware of the proposal, and it was indicated he may personally second a motion for the establishment of such an institution in a plenary session of the Pan-American Conference.

Former Pan-American conferences have concerned themselves with questions of territorial rights, nonaggression, and sovereignty in the main; the forthcoming conference will be mainly an economic affair and it will be aimed toward mutual cooperation for betterment of economic conditions in North and South America.

Much of the success of the conference and certainly the future of the plan for an international economic cooperative body rests with J. M. Puig Casauranc, Foreign Minister of Mexico and head of his country's delegation to the conference.

At the present time, Dr. Puig Casauranc is winding up a tour of the West Coast of South America preliminary to going to Montevideo.

Writer Tells Farm 'Woe' Amid Plenty

they attributed to the NRA. Invariably they spoke of overalls—which have nearly doubled in price since the new deal began.

"Come with us and visit some farmers," several urged upon me. "Then you will learn for yourself how badly off they are."

Cakes and Coffee.

More drives through rich lands, past fat pastures. Comfortable frame houses, many of them with electric lights, hot-air furnaces or steam heat, electric washing machines, running water, radio, piano, telephone, ice boxes—all the modern conveniences. With true rural hospitality rich cakes, thick cream and coffee, pressed upon us to the accompaniment of tales of distress —of the difficulty of paying taxes, interest and insurance; of the shortage of cash, the disappearance of savings either through bank failures or through loans which have gone bad. Impossible to make both ends meet unless we go back to the standards of living of our fathers and grandfathers. The cities—especially in the East—are conspiring to keep the farmer "down." Something must be done to help the farmers or the whole country will go under. The farmers form the largest purchasing group in the entire country. Help them and you will save the country.

So runs their story.

"What can and should be done about it?" I inquire.

A dozen different answers are forthcoming. The most popular is that the Government should fix prices and maintain them at such a level that the farmer can make a living.

Put Up to Government.

"How is this to be done?"

That is for the Government to decide. Didn't they fix the price of wheat during the war? Then why can't they fix the price of wheat and other commodities now? We are living in a crisis as acute as that in the war days. If the Government had power to fix prices then it ought to do so now.

"What about inflation?" I ask.

"We ought to have it," is the reply. "We need more money. The Government ought to print it." With the exception of about half the bankers with whom I spoke every one believes that inflation would help. Ask them why and they usually can not explain. They have been told that it would raise prices and would make it easier for them to pay off their debts. As they want higher prices and a lesser burden of debt, inflation naturally appeals to them.

"And how about the various schemes of the Government to restrict production?"

Again a diversity of opinions. Those who have actually received cash from the Government are in favor of the program. Many others doubt that it will succeed. They say that crops will be larger next year than this. Furthermore, they question whether it is economically sound to destroy crops instead of harvesting them. Many even feel that there is something sacrilegious in butchering young piglets and sows that are with young. Furthermore, they dislike this sort of waste while the unemployed are starving. A few outspoken individuals—especially in the Western region—say that they would be better off if the Government let them alone—if it didn't try to interfer in so many different ways. An increasing number distrusts the President's advisers, and complains because the Administration farm program is being framed by persons whose actual contact with farm life is limited. Even Henry Wallace, whose selection as Secretary of Agriculture was originally hailed, is coming in for an ever larger share of criticism. Only the President remains immune. He is still looked upon as the farmers' Messiah. They have faith in his good intentions and his earnestness, and they believe they see on his shoulders the mantle of the elder Roosevelt, whose popularity in the Middle West and West is still great.

Editor's note—In his next article Mr. Roosevelt will deal with the farmer's debts.

Gallery Glimpses

By Robert C. Albright.

It happened in London a short time ago.

Edward H. Preston, London correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, waited for a bus in the rain just outside the United States Embassy.

A dignified stranger, heavy set, middle-aged, evidently an American, joined him. Casually, they struck up a conversation, as people waiting on street corners will.

The stranger explained he had called a taxi. He invited young Preston to share it with him as far as the Savoy Hotel.

In the cab the conversation turned on the sights of London, its literary and art treasures. Both were enthusiastic over the wonders of the British Museum.

"I've been trying for weeks to persuade my father to come over and see it," Preston remarked.

"And who is your father?" inquired the stranger.

"James D. Preston. He's librarian of the United States Senate."

"Oh, yes," smiled the stranger. "I know your father very well."

"Indeed! And how do you know him?"

"Well," replied the stranger, "I'm a United States senator from Ohio."

His companion was Senator Robert J. Bulkley.

The office of Col. Edwin A. Halsey, secretary to the Senate, has been transformed into a question and answer bureau in the last few days, and all because of the Norris amendment to the Constitution.

People just can't get used to Congress starting in January instead of December. Those who have been able to straighten that out, somehow have become confused over the dates.

Col. Halsey's office is catching most of the queries. When Col. Halsey tells them, they stay answered.

"No," we hear the Colonel courteously explaining over the telephone, "Congress convenes next January 3, not the 20th. The 20th is Inauguration Day. No, not this year; in 1936. Yes, Congress convenes next year. Yes, January 3."

The Senate Secretariat, tried and proven proving ground for public office, promotes another one of its members to the United States Senate.

Not that the Secretariat formally met and decreed that Joseph C. O'Mahoney, former Secretary to the late Senator Kendrick, should succeed to Kendrick's seat in the Senate.

Not that they gave the matter a thought until they read about it in the papers.

The thing just happened, as it has happened time and again to other secretaries to Senators, whose specialized service and contact with affairs has developed their jobs into one of the most promising jumping-off places for public office.

It happened to Senator Wallace Humphrey White, jr., of Maine. He served as clerk of the Commerce Committee, Secretary to the President of the Senate, and secretary to his grandfather, the late Senator William P. Frye, of Maine.

It happened to Senator Bob La Follette, of Wisconsin, who was a student of Government affairs in the Senatorial office of his father before he himself came to the Senate in 1925.

It happened to the late Senator William Harris of Georgia, who served his apprenticeship as secretary to the late Senator A. S. Clay of Georgia.

And there was the late Senator Arthur Pugh Gorman of Maryland, who had been a page, clerk, secretary and Capitol postmaster before he was sent to the Senate.

Over in the House, there is Representative Jack Cochran, of Missouri. He was secretary to the late Senator William J. Stone and the Senate Foreign Relations committee before he came to the House.

And there is Representative Frank Oliver, of New York, who served his time as secretary to the late Senator James A. O'Gorman of New York.

There is something about these Senate secretaries.

There came a day when Big Chief Plentycoos, no longer young, yearned to see the paleface Capitol before he set out alone for the happy hunting grounds of his fathers.

It was more than senile curiosity that prompted the stern old Indian chieftain to seek out the Senate chamber and Senator John B. Kendrick when he arrived in Washington.

In other days he had ridden the Wyoming plains with John Kendrick. They were younger then, and Kendrick had not yet turned his eyes toward Washington.

Senator Kendrick greeted the friend of his youth with more than his usual heartiness as the two met after years in the President's room. Then a look of concern came over his face. Plentycoos had aged.

"Great Chief has more lines in his face than when I last saw him," he said.

Plentycoos smiled. "Yes, and Great White Chief's hair is cut shortest where his hair is the whitest," he grunted.

Roper Watches News Releases

Central Agency to Handle Publicity of Commerce Department.

The Department of Commerce, with its 13 bureaus and divisions, is going about disseminating publicity, news stories and public information in a new way.

It seemed that the various offices were too disjointed or they duplicated material or made things difficult for newspapermen. So Secretary Roper suggested the establishment of a central agency to coordinate news releases and otherwise glorify the "handout."

So the Intradepartmental Committee on Public Relations and Information has been created, with Chester H. McCall, assistant to Secretary Roper, as chairman, and E. W. Jensen, assistant secretary of the Special Industry Recovery Board, secretary.

Its members are representatives from each bureau, the two Assistant Secretaries, secretary of the Federal Radio Commission, assistant secretary of the recovery board, assistant secretary of the department's business advisory and planning council, the solicitor and Mr. Roper's administrative assistant.

Incidentally, one of its first acts was not to issue a release on its own birth and the news was surreptitiously obtained in timeworn "tip" fashion.

Annual Chest Drive Starts In One Week

Speakers and Workers Organized to Ask for $1,945,000.

With the campaign to raise $1,945,000 for the Community Chest opening one week from tomorrow, final plans are being made to have speakers and solicitors adequately cover the District.

Lieut. Col. U. S. Grant 3d, chairman of the governmental unit in the drive, has appointed Wallace B. Robinson, of the U. S. Railroad Administration, as chairman of the Government speakers' committee. Robinson has named on his committee Maj. Sidney Morgan, Miss Irene Grant, John F. Victory, Dr. M. C. Merrill, Warren E. Emley, Miss Mary Anderson, E. Claude Babcock, and Edgar Gerlach.

"Courteous Treatment" Asked.

A regular corps of Government department speakers is being trained for work in connection with this committee and it will be supplemented by a group from the Chest speakers' unit, consisting of Francis Miller, Adjt. Gilbert S. Decker, Norman Fregger, Theodore Johnson, Isadore Hershfield, Martin O'Phelan, J. A. Nolan, Miss Gertrude Bowling, Linn C. Drake, Albert Grobstein, Clement A. Ducy, Earle A. Nash, Thomas Carey, Joseph T. Casey, Thomas J. Frayley, the Rev. W. Joyce Russell, Mrs. Leonard Schloss, Albert Viault, James DeForce, Harold Fitz, A. D. Calvert, William N. Freeman, Raymond Walter, Ray H. Everett, Miss Elizabeth Beatty and Mrs. Mark Lansburgh.

Frank J. Hogan, general campaign chairman, has made an appeal to the public for "fair and courteous treatment" of the thousands of workers who will solicit the funds for the 60 organizations.

Promises 60 Calls in One.

"All I ask," he said, "is that you remember when your friend and neighbor calls to give you an opportunity to subscribe to the Chest this year that he is making 60 calls at one time, asking for your help for the 60 organizations in the Chest, which, but for the Chest, would be conducting 60 separate campaigns this year."

He declared that contributors could be confident that by "this method of solicitation a larger percentage of every dollar you contribute will go for the actual work for which it is intended than if it were contributed through any other method."

King's Slaying Focuses Eyes On Afghans' Isolated Capital

"No Welcome" Sign Out, But Kabul Boasts Modern Tone.

When cables flashed news of the assassination of King Nadir Shah of Afghanistan in Kabul, many Americans no doubt reached for the family atlas or map of the world to discover the whereabouts of this remote kingdom and its capital city, so far remove from the beaten paths of commerce and tourist travel.

"Kabul ranks as one of the least-known capitals in the world," says Maynard Owen Williams in a communication to the National Geographic Society. "It may be classed in this regard with Lhasa, capital of Tibet, and Riyadh, one of the two capitals of the newly formed nation, Saudi-Arabia, in the center of the great Arabian peninsula.

"No Visitors Welcome."

"Kabul long hung out a 'no welcome' sign to all visitors, noted or otherwise. It made an exception, however, two years ago when the Citroen-Haardt Trans-Asia Expedition, in which the National Geography Society cooperated, passed through Afghanistan en route from Syria to China by tractor motor cars. As American representative on this expedition, I saw Afghanistan during an era of peace under Nadir Shah.

"In spite of its isolation, Kabul is far from crude or primitive. The Afghan capital has electric lights from a water power plant, telephones and automobiles, many of them serving foreign diplomatic representatives, machine shops, munitions works and factories for making soap, shoes and cloth, all built under English supervision. Its tanneries, aided by outside experts, are sources of especial pride.

King Fostered Education.

"When I reached Kabul I found that King Nadir Shah, in his every day life, gave little evidence of living up to the Westerner's conception of an Oriental potentate. His slight figure, in European dress except for a brown astrakhan cap, was that of a kindly professor. His spectacled eyes were strikingly bright and his grey-edged beard was neatly and closely trimmed.

"He was deeply interested in education and had been instrumental in sending a considerable number of students abroad at government expense. During several receptions by King Nadir Shah and his ministers, I was keenly questioned as to courses of study in American colleges.

"Kabul had its days of modernity in 1928 after the return of Amanullah and Queen Souriya from their triumph in Europe. The building of Amanullah's 'New Kabul,' 4 miles away, threatened the mud-and-wattle city's role of capital. But Amanullah fell and the imposing stone 'Parliament' he built is still windowless. Old Kabul remains the capital."

Government Bond Declines.

The steps taken by the Administration to depreciate the gold value of the dollar at home and abroad seem to have been carried on with a singular disregard for the possible effects of such policies upon the market for Government securities. Apparently, the majority of advocates of inflation fail to perceive any essential incongruity between a monetary policy which encourages a flight from the dollar and the development of Federal relief plans which necessitate large and continuing drafts upon the investment funds of the country.

A large number of Americans appear to believe that the credit of their Government is impregnable because of the economic resources of the country. They are likely to forget that credit is based not only upon the possession of wealth but upon confidence in the borrower.

The credit of a government, like that of a private borrower, depends upon its attitude toward its obligations as well as upon its resources. In fact, the attitude of a government is more important, because it has the sovereign right, within limits, to alter the terms of a contract to its own advantage. Hence, a government which has shown a determination to respect its obligations is one that attracts and holds the confidence of investors. These fundamental truths may be disregarded for a time, but eventually their universality becomes apparent.

So far, the credit of the Federal Government has stood up remarkably well under the impact of monetary policies which have contributed materially to the condition of virtual stagnation that has existed in the market for private capital issues. In October the Commercial and Financial Chronicle reported the smallest volume of new capital issues since it began to compile such statistics. Apart from corporate stock issues amounting to $3,100,000 and new municipal issues totalling $55,592,000, the investment field was left almost entirely to Federal issues.

This virtual borrowing monopoly of the United States Government is due primarily to the great confidence which the investor has felt in the credit of the Government. But it is explained also in part by the scarcity of other investment outlets at a time when private business ventures are handicapped by monetary instability and other factors.

The recent declines in dollar exchange values, following expansion of the gold buying policy of the R. F. C., have been accompanied by a sharp recession in quotations for Government bonds, indicating an accelerated flight from the dollar obligations of the Government itself. This situation should bring a salutary realization of the serious consequences that would follow if investment confidence were to be destroyed by persistent tampering with the currency. In that case, Government loans would have to be floated at steadily rising rates of interest, and long-term investment offerings would give place to short-term issues, financed by banks already heavily loaded with Government securities.

Unless the existing uncertainty regarding our monetary policies is removed and steps taken to restore the stability of the dollar, there may be increasing difficulty in obtaining the investment support which is vitally necessary in financing the Government's spending program. If that support should not be forthcoming, the Government inevitably will be forced to turn to that method of financing which is the only alternative open to a government whose credit has been exhausted—that is, the printing presses.

Municipal Power Plants.

Elections in various parts of the country this week failed to develop any concerted movement toward the acquisition of municipal power plants. The issue was brought forward in a number of cities and many smaller municipalities. Advocates of public ownership of power plants have been very active since the administration launched its Tennessee Valley project and offered public works funds to cities wishing to build power facilities of their own. To date, however, the public response has been adverse in a majority of cases.

The Public Works Administration offered to grant San Francisco $1,400,000 toward construction of a municipal power plant, but the voters rejected the plan by refusing to approve a bond issue to cover the remainder of the cost. Salt Lake City voted down a proposal to construct an $18,000,000 municipal power system. Plans for city-owned power plants also were rejected at the polls in Cincinnati, Youngstown, Portsmouth and Washington Court House, Ohio. A number of other communities are reported to have taken similar action.

Camden, N. J., Akron and Sandusky, Ohio, approved the construction of publicly-owned power systems. The population of the cities which decided to leave power development in the hands of private capital is nearly four times as great as the population of the cities that voted this week for new municipal plants.

The vote on this issue in Birmingham a month ago is particularly interesting because that city is in the region which may be served with power from the Government's Tennessee Valley project. A proposal that the city acquire the properties of the Birmingham Electric Company was rejected by a majority of more than 3,000 votes out of a total of about 17,000. Homewood, Ala., joined Birmingham in opposition to municipal ownership, but ten villages and towns in that State, with a combined population of less than one-fourth that of Birmingham, favored municipal plants.

At the end of 1932 a total of 1,802 power establishments were owned and operated by municipalities, compared with 1,627 commercial power establishments. The municipal plants, however, produce less than 5 per cent of the electrical energy generated in the United States.

The number of municipal plants in operation is reported to have declined 30 per cent in the last ten years. According to the Census Bureau, this decline is due to the abandonment of some municipal plants and the acquisition of others by commercial systems. The output of municipal plants declined from 5 per cent of the total in 1922 to 4.7 per cent in 1927. A recent study of the subject indicates "a continued slow decline in the relative importance of municipal power operations" in the last few years.

Housing Under NRA.

The housing division of the Public Works Administration has received numerous applications for assistance in building individual houses, remodeling stores or apartment buildings, and promoting the construction and sale of small house developments of the usual type. Because of this, the assistant director of the division, Horace W. Peaslee, took occasion to explain definitely to the National Conference on City Government at Atlantic City the scope and limitations of the housing program.

Federal financing in this direction is limited to assistance in the construction of "low cost rental housing on low cost land for those lower income groups for which modern sanitary housing is not now available." This means mass housing for rental and not individual homes for sale. Mr. Peaslee points out that since the applicant must be limited by law or charter as to dividends and interest on securities, and as no loans will be made for speculative building projects, it is obvious that the individual as such can not be recognized.

Owing to the wide variety of municipal conditions the housing division finds it impossible to answer many questions in general terms, such as what is meant by low rentals and low cost housing. These are points which must be determined in each case, it is explained, by the responsible groups which apply for loans. Such local agencies are best informed as to what rents can be paid by their own slum dwellers and also as to costs of land and buildings.

The housing division finds that relatively few sections have measured up to the administration's fundamental concept of the objectives sought in dealing with the slum problem. Mr. Peaslee warns that until projects are completely divorced from any thought of profit, the real ends of this movement can not be accomplished.

Tarascon Wins!

Tarascon, that picturesque Provencal town on the Rhone made famous by the satire of Alphonse Daudet, leaps into the limelight again through the good fortune of its hairdresser, Paul Bonhoure. He held a ticket in the French national lottery, and on the night of the drawing went to bed, with that sublime nonchalance under which Tarasconians conceal the volcanoes of their emotions.

"But Tarascon was awake," reports the wireless dispatch. "It came and shouted below his windows: 'You've won five millions!'"

Five million francs!

Paul Bonhoure maintained his massive calm. No sign revealed that another great personage was added to the annals of Tarascon. The tax collector, M. Poujol, who had sold the ticket to M. Bonhoure, elbowed his way through the crowd. Yes, the good news was true—five millions!

An embrace—a kiss on both cheeks—and the two friends saunter to a cafe for a game of bezique and a sip of absinthe. But then? M. Bonhoure returns home and to bed.

Tarascon undergoes a paroxysm of admiration. Shall he be "maire"? Shall he be elevated to the Chamber of Deputies? No! Tarascon sees in the dim background of the future its native son sitting in the chair of the President of the Republic!

What does Paul Bonhoure say? With icy calm he waves aside political ambition. "I shall go on working," he says. "One gets so bored if one doesn't work. But every one of my lady patrons shall have a free permanent wave."

Tarascon is in raptures. What a man! What a fortunate city! Five millions!

British Caribbean Isles.

Association of the Leeward and Windward island groups into a colony under a single governor is the result of the work of the British Closer Union Commission. By consolidating the separate groups it is expected that the islands will be able to act more effectively in matters of common concern.

The association will be as loose as is compatible with their political unity, while giving each member substantial local autonomy. The report of the commission indicates that a binding federation is impractical for islands so widely separated, each being interested in its own affairs and paying scant attention to its neighbors.

It is expected, however, that a single governor will be able to administer and coordinate the interests of the islands all the better as a result of his detachment from local questions. His position will resemble somewhat that of the Viceroy of India with regard to the various provinces. Comprising a much smaller territory, without the complications of the great Indian nation, it is assumed that the governor will be able to give adequate consideration to the problems of each island and prevent insular jealousy from marring cooperation which would benefit all.

Disappointment was expressed by Trinidad at being left out of the federation. It was found by Sir Charles Orr and Sir Charles Fergusson, who headed the commission, that public opinion in Trinidad was too preoccupied at present with the problems of trade recession to be able to support the conditions of union with the smaller islands. It is anticipated by the commission, however, that the formation of the British Caribbean Isles will pave the way for the eventual creation of the United West Indies, to embrace all the British islands south of Jamaica.

An attempt to limit subjects and discussion at the Pan-American Conference is the surest way to have the lid blown off.

MUZZLING THE PRESS

Why Criticize Germany While Italy Goes Unrebuked?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: How fickle is the editorial memory!

The editorial entitled "The German Plebiscite," in The Post of October 17, is singularly reminiscent of the expressions of opinion which appeared in your columns, as in those of numerous other American newspapers, when Mussolini and his Black Shirts seized the reins of power in Italy just 11 years ago.

You say: "Thus only the forms of parliamentary government are preserved. Actually the German nation is in the grip of a single party that has crushed all opposition, muzzled the press, and destroyed all semblance of representative government."

Granting that this is true, permit me to inquire in what respect the existing government in Germany differs from the existing government in Italy. Is not the Italian nation in the grip of the Fascist party? Why ignore the fact that at the last Italian elections (according to the current issue of the Statesman's Year Book) 98.3 per cent of the electors voted for the list of candidates selected by the Great Fascist Council?

You censure Germany for muzzling the press, yet make no mention of the fact that the Italian press has been muzzled by governmental decree ever since 1924.

Is it not pertinent to inquire, then, why you see fit to denounce the Nazi regime as tyrannical, pernicious, destructive of all semblance of representative government, while remaining silent as to the Fascist regime in Italy, which, though it has pursued an almost identical policy, has admittedly brought about an enormous improvement in the morale of the Italian people and in political conditions in the peninsula?

Nor can I see why Germany is any more deserving of censure than Japan for withdrawing from the League of Nations. Germany withdrew because she had become convinced that the victorious powers which control the machinery of the league did not intend to keep their solemn pledges to disarm, that they were only "stalling."

And let no one delude himself into believing that the present government of Germany can be forcibly coerced save at an appalling cost. True, Germany has no heavy artillery, tanks or military aircraft, nor can they be manufactured secretly or overnight. But, unless I am greatly mistaken, she is amply able to defend herself against attack.

"EXPLAIN IT, PLEASE"

What Is the Actual Price Paid for Gold in France?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As our dollar is now worth only about 65 cents in France and we are paying 32½ cents per ounce for gold bought in France, our dollar buys only two ounces of gold or at rate of 50 cents per ounce for all gold bought in France.

If this is correct I wish you would explain it to the public.

A PLEA FOR BEARS.

"Little Clowns of the Woods" Cruelly Treated.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some time ago I was very much impressed by a letter written by William M. Mooney and published in The Post, giving an admirable description of the wonderful scenic beauty of Skyline drive and its surroundings. "No scenery in the United States surpasses that which may be seen and enjoyed along the routes in Virginia," this gentleman writes.

Among all this splendor and symphony of beauty he did not overlook, but observed with pity, a number of bears penned and chained under cruel conditions. I, a Virginian, protest against the commercialized cruelty tolerated by the Game Commission of Virginia. Bears come under the direct classification of game and should be protected as such.

Several years ago some one living in Falls Church had two cubs which he kept in a garage. During a hot summer spell one escaped. Cries of "bear!" went over the town. Men and boys armed with guns and clubs were in quick pursuit, and finally the little fellow was clubbed and killed.

I make an especial appeal for the protection of innocent wild creatures that make the mountains of Virginia their habitat, and hope to see the day when the Shenandoah National Park will be a sanctuary for these little clowns of the woods (the little black bear), which are almost on the verge of extinction.

Authority on Near East Conditions Attracting Interest.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Having been a daily reader of The Post for many years, it gave me the greatest pleasure to listen in a week ago to the announcement that Dr. William T. Ellis would have in the Saturday's edition of your good paper a column on the international Sunday school lesson.

This was especially gratifying to me for the reason there is no one of my acquaintance whom I consider as well qualified as Dr. Ellis to write upon anything pertaining to the Christian religion and conditions in the Near East and the important events occurring in the land designated as "The cradle of the race."

AT ROACHE'S RUN

Birds There Are Already Disturbed, Says Indignant Angler.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The order recently issued prohibiting fishing in Roache's Run on account of disturbing the birds is the most ridiculous thing that I have heard of in years. Fancy a few fishermen disturbing birds alongside an airport, a railroad and heavy traveled road! Some meddlesome busybody tried to induce Col. Grant to ban fishing at this same place about a year ago, but the descendant of old "fight it out on this line if it takes all summer" was too smart to fall for that line of hooey.

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

No newspaperman, or for that matter anybody else, is closer to Mr. Roosevelt, who knows his mental processes better, than Mr. Ernest K. Lindley. He "covered" him at Albany in that intimate relationship which Mr. Roosevelt had with the Albany press boys, wrote the approved biography of Candidate Roosevelt and has been close at his side since.

BARGERON.

For that reason his book, "The Roosevelt Revolution," is most revealing. It would seem unfortunate that Ernie chose to call it a revolution because the indications are now that the Administration is trying to get away from that word, but then the book was prepared several weeks ago, when the description had not come into the Administration's disfavor—when it was very proud of it, in fact.

• • • •

Without having had time as yet to read the whole book the first few chapters are enough to give one pause. Ernie doesn't consider apparently, and I assume neither does Mr. Roosevelt, that the electorate voted for him last November as much as it voted against Mr. Hoover. He says:

"Mr. Roosevelt was no great popular idol during the Presidential campaign of 1932. Vast crowds came out to look at him eagerly, hopefully. They liked him, but they went away still skeptical. * * * But he was the one sure means of rebuking the party in power."

It is clear, then, that Mr. Roosevelt does not consider that a mandate was given to him to pursue the policies which are coming to arouse so much opposition. The one mandate given to him was to get the other party out of power. He did that.

• • • •

What is all the more revealing, though, is Ernie's description of how cleverly Mr. Roosevelt kept his socialistic schemes to himself, or so veiled them in generalities that they did not register on the public mind. Ernie hardly can conceal his admiration for the manner in which Mr. Roosevelt successfully did this. All of the things he is now trying out he had in mind all along, we are told, not necessarily in detail, but in broad outline. Says this friendly biographer:

"In spite of the warnings of President Hoover and Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills, the public as a whole undoubtedly failed to see anything very revolutionary in Mr. Roosevelt's program. Mr. Roosevelt spread his ideas by gentle persuasion rather than by shock. As in the Commonwealth Club speech (in San Francisco in September, 1932) his most far-reaching conceptions were clothed in general statements of principles. The conservatives could pass them off as meaningless rhetoric of a political campaigner, and the liberal intellectuals could doubt that he really understood their implications, or intended to apply them in specific action. * * * He had long been adept at winning popular approval for really radical reforms by eschewing radical language.

• • • •

"The doctrine of the good neighbor, the common law concerning nuisances, the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Boy Scout manual, the pioneering spirit of America, a common-sense analysis of the requirements of a specific situation—with these as his authorities and raw materials and his own family tradition to embellish the whole, Mr. Roosevelt was able to express some pretty radical thoughts without frightening the conservatism of many of those who merely wanted a change in administration."

Ernie tells, seemingly laughingly, how Mr. Roosevelt cleverly applauded Carter Glass' famous gold standard speech without ever saying that he stood for the gold standard. A "sound" dollar is what Mr. Roosevelt actually said, it is pointed out.

Looking back, you know, it was all very slick. Ernie should have added—and he may have done it further in the book—that Mr. Roosevelt kept his schemes pretty well concealed, not only in the campaign, but in the last session of Congress when he was asking for authority to carry them out. They were just heroic emergency measures then—not to be permanent at all.

It's a good book.

BELGIAN DEFENSES.

Since the war Belgium has revamped her shattered forts at staggering cost, rebuilt Liege and Namur and constructed the superfort of Eben-Eymal—a name the next war may make memorable, says Time.

"In case of attack," Premier Count Charles de Broqueville has declared, "we would now have an army of 350,000 for use instead of the 40,000 we had in 1914. In addition to these forces a certain number of French divisions would be rushed immediately to help Belgium, but only should our government so request."

Luxembourg's Grand Duchess Charlotte has lumped her beauteous little realm with King Albert's. Luxembourg, the first land the Germans invaded in 1914, will be defended as a unit with the Belgian provinces of Limbourg, Liege and Luxembourg.

Hitler Praised In Hindenburg Plea for Unity

Nation Urged to Support "Peace and Honor Policy" at Polls Today.

Berlin, Nov. 11 (AP).—President Paul von Hindenburg appealed to the German people today "to stand before the world as a united nation, united in the will for peace but also united in the demand for honor, equality and the respect of others."

The venerable former war marshal indorsed Chancellor Hitler's stand for peace and honor, asked Germans to do likewise in the foreign policy plebiscite and Reichstag elections tomorrow and ended one of the most remarkable pre-election campaigns in German history.

"I and the government of the Reich, united in the will to get Germany out of the disruption and weakness of postwar years, summon the German people to decide tomorrow on its own vote and to proclaim before the entire world whether you approve our principles and our policy and make it your own," the president declared.

"Many years of weakening of this unity lie behind us. Thanks to the courageous, strong, and positive leadership of Chancellor Hitler and his colleagues, Germany has refound herself and again has strength to follow the path dictated to her by national honor and her future.

"Work and reconstruction internally, peace, honor and equality externally, these are the principles whereupon Germany wishes to erect firmly her state and her life.

Declares Against War.

"With God's help we will keep German unity. We want to preserve our honor and we want also and long for permanent peace.

"It is a matter of lies and slander when warlike intentions are attributed to us in foreign countries. Nobody in Germany desires a conflict of force.

"For he, who like me has survived three campaigns, the horrors of war, can not desire a new war, and will regard the maintenance of peace as a most serious duty toward the German people and the entire world."

Long Campaign Ending.

For three weeks the chancellor with Vice Chancellor von Papen, national minister without portfolio, Hermann Goering; Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels, Labor Minister Franze Seldte and other Nazi spellbinders have been going over the country telling every worker, every peasant and every captain of industry that Germany's position in the council of nations depends upon one thing and one thing alone—that every citizen endorse the plebiscite and the Reichstag slate.

Whoever thinks or acts otherwise has been stamped as a traitor.

Hitler has left no doubt that he expects the entire world to sit up and take notice that all Germany, including Jews, endorses him and the policy he enunciated last month when the government withdrew from the League of Nations and the World Disarmament Conference.

Italians Hint At Withdrawal From Geneva

Delegate Says Further Talks Useless With Germans Absent.

Geneva, Nov. 11 (AP).—The belief that it would be useless for the steering committee of the World Disarmament Conference to continue its work because of the absence of Germany was expressed before the committee today by Senor Soragna, the Italian member.

The declaration was interpreted in some circles as a semiwithdrawal of Italy and a further weakening of the conference.

Italy henceforth will refrain from voting on outstanding problems affecting Germany.

The decision was further interpreted as a move by Premier Mussolini to do nothing that might prejudice Germany's position, and some quarters held the belief that the Italian leader is convinced that consultations by the big powers, in Germany should be substituted for the conversations here.

Senor Soragna made it clear that Italy no longer accepted the disarmament plan the British foreign secretary, Sir John Simon, submitted the day Germany withdrew from the conference.

Arthur Henderson, British president of the Disarmament Conference, in a speech today described the conference as being at the most critical point in its history.

Failure, he said, would be tragic.

New Postoffices Will Be Built Modestly to Fit Surroundings

No Longer Will They Be Towns' Pride; Utility Is New Watchword.

Those strictly utilitarian postoffice buildings which the Public Works Administration plans to build throughout the country are going to be different.

They not only are to be plain and unostentatious, but the Treasury Department yesterday reported they are to be unstandardized and built to conform to their surroundings. In other words, one of those buildings is not going to be the one and only imposing structure in the town—as many postoffice buildings in small towns so often are, it was pointed out.

Each building, the Treasury Department reported, is to be designed after the site has been obtained and the contour of the terrain and general aspect of the surroundings studied. Thus, an exact description of these "strictly utilitarian" buildings was avoided, and with equal facility the Treasury Department was unable to locate a public building that would be considered in the ostentatious and extravagent classification.

Public buildings in Washington, of course, are in neither class. They are departmental buildings—something entirely different.

Exemptions Not Applicable in Interstate Trade.

Provisions of the President's reemployment agreement exempting from the NRA requirements employers in towns of 2,500 or less who employ less than five persons will not include those engaged in the sale of gasoline and oil.

An order to this effect made public yesterday by Secretary Ickes, oil administrator, said all transactions within the petroleum industry, including the retail sale of gasoline and other products, affect interstate commerce in petroleum and its products.

The Secretary's order said provisions of the President's reemployment agreement, issued July 27, 1933, exempting from minimum wage and hour provisions employers in towns of less than 2,300 applied only to those not in a business affecting interstate commerce.

Wilkinson, Holmes To Study Education

Garnet C. Wilkinson, assistant superintendent of public schools, and Dean Dwight O. W. Holmes, of Howard University, have been named by Dr. Paul C. Stetson, president of the department of superintendence of the National Education Association, as members of a National committee on a National Outlook on Education, which will report at the Cleveland convention of the department in February.

Problems of teacher training, a comprehensive program of public education, school finance, education for the new America, public education and public welfare and the interpretation of the schools to the public will be subjects reported on by other committees at the department meeting.

Democrat Wins Mayor's Race In Louisville

Victory by 331 Majority First for Party in Two Decades.

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 11 (AP).—Election of Neville Miller (Democrat), as Mayor of Louisville, was conceded today by Chesley H. Searcy, of the Republican campaign committee.

Col. Dan M. Carrell, Republican candidate, made no statement.

Searcy's opinion was given when tabulation of 422 of the city's 568 precincts gave Miller 331 majority. The margin was slim, but the Republican strongholds were passed. The figures were: Miller, 46,579; Carrell, 46,248.

Miller, 39-year-old dean of the University of Louisville Law School, will be the first Democratic mayor the city has had in two decades. Indications were he would carry his party's ticket with him.

Five years ago Louisville had a Democratic administration for a few months, all the Republicans elected being thrown out by the courts on grunds of fraud, but in the special election that followed Republicans again were elected.

Kentucky continued to pile up its majority for repeal as additional reports trickled in today and the proposal to authorize the General Assembly to remove the State tax on real estate was running slightly behind. The totals were:

Repeal: 3,128 of the State's 4,204 precincts—For repeal, 261,346; against repeal, 187,965.

Tax: 3,083 precincts reported—For removal, 100,140; against removal, 101,261.

Counting was discontinued today on account of Armistice Day, but will be resumed Monday.

Dog Takes Plane Ride for Deafness

Owner Says Canine Seems "Somewhat Improved."

Denver, Nov. 11 (AP).—A dog took the airplane cure for deafness today and after the flight he seemed "somewhat improved," said his mistress, Miss Mary Lee, of Long Island, N. Y.

The dog, 14-month-old Dalmatian coach, was strapped to the front seat of a plane piloted by Walter Higley, of Denver. Higley flew to an altitude of 16,000 and then made a series of power dives.

Miss Lee said she had heard of cases where human hearings had been restored through similar flights.

The Federal Diary

Public Printer George H. Carter congratulates J. Thomas Ford on his reelection as president of the G. P. O. Cafeteria and Recreation Association, as other officers watch. Left to right, William J. Cassidy, secretary; Ernest R. Taylor, second vice president; Miss Grace E. Stevens, representative of Public Printer; Louis C. Vogt, treasurer; Mr. Carter, Mr. Ford, Mrs. Cora B. McGrath, third vice president; Walter A. Browne, first vice president, and Joseph L. May, chairman board of auditors.

THE brightest week for Federal employes since July 1 has just closed. Each day brought forth more hopes for restoration of pay, permanency of employment and all the other items vital to the welfare of Uncle Sam's workers. A summary of developments follows:

BAKER.

1. Recognition by the Civil Service Commission of the need of considering the humanitarian elements in applications and its courage in rescinding the age-limit order.

2. Additional indorsements from members of Congress for repeal of pay cuts.

3. Approval by President Roosevelt of an order restoring permanent status to 3,364 employes in the Office of National Parks, Buildings and Reservations.

4. Formal action started by more than 6,700 Legionnaires of Washington to line up the 1,000,000 legion members throughout the country for repeal of pay cuts, reemployment of dismissed workers with Civil Service rating, and preference for veterans.

5. Spanish-American veterans urge repeal of pay cuts.

6. Veterans of Foreign Wars take similar action.

7. General increase of trade, professional, church and citizens' organizations giving support to the employes' cause.

National Legislative Council.

8. Formation of the National Legislative Council of Federal Employe Organizations, representing more than 150,000 workers, to wage a concerted battle for abolishment of the 15 per cent cut.

9. William L. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, vigorously enters fight against Representative Blanton, foe of pay restoration, whose controversy with employe leaders flared anew last week. Green called Blanton a "blatant demagogue."

10. Several members of Congress have gone further than pledging support for restored pay with promises to aid in bolstering the merit system and other projects. This was outlined by several members of Congress attending a dinner of 600 in honor of Luther C. Steward, president of the National Federation of Federal Employes, in Pittsburgh.

11. Increased membership in both major employe organizations. N. F. F. E. reported six new local unions. A. F. G. E. reported five new lodges.

Today's Epitaph.

Beneath the old moss
Is Clerk McStew;
He laughed when his boss
Did say—"To who."

What Today Means

"Scorpio."

If November 12 is your birthday the best hours for you on this date are from 2 to 4 p. m. and from 8:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 10:45 to 11:55 a. m., from 1 to 1:40 p. m. and from 6:35 to 7:55 p. m.

It is possible that you will be conscience-stricken on this date over some matter that you thought you had settled once and for all and in the right way. It will probably be a matter concerning some member of your family. You will not have the quiet that you had hoped for. You will not be able to count for certainty on what the "girl friend or the boy friend" will think of some matter you hope to talk over.

The child born on this November 12 will probably be a wiry little one who will be much healthier than its appearance would seem to indicate. Will require lots of fresh air and exercise in the open. Do not try to force it along scholastic lines; its mentality is such that it will not lag long behind the others.

If November 12 is the date of your birth, it is not at all certain just what type of person you may turn out to be. You have possibilities of turning out extremely well and, again, you may not amount to anything. Fate has placed matters very largely in your own hands and, more than most people, you are master of your own destiny. Your parents, events of your early life and, more than anything else, the persons with whom you come into contact during the formative age will have much to do in determining where you will eventually end up. You are inclined to be lazy, but when your interest is aroused in anything, you are a hard and willing worker. You like the finer things of life, and yet, with but slight influence of the wrong sort, you could drift into evil ways. You are ambitious, to some degree. On the other hand, there are times that you feel that nothing much matters. It is up to you to decide; choose wisely and well.

Born on November 12, you will be most successful if you marry early in life. You will thus gain an anchorage and a real stimulus to succeed and to do what is right. You need responsibilities, and the sooner they come to rest on your shoulders the better. You are not one who requires encouragement or forcing; you must make up your own mind.

Successful people born on November 12:

George Munro, publisher.
Edward V. Valentine, sculptor.
William M. Sloane, author and educator.
Elizabeth Cady Stanton, reformer.

NRA May Call New Building Code Hearings

Forces in Favor of Swift Adoption Assemble Here This Week.

Forces seeking to push through immediate adoption of the construction code under consideration by NRA will mobilize in Washington this week to present a united front in their fight.

Meanwhile, it was indicated at NRA that the Government may accede to the demands of labor for revision of the proposed code to the extent of reopening hearings on the proposal.

Four meetings have been called for this week. They are Associated General Contractors of America, Monday and Tuesday; board of directors of the United States Chamber of Commerce, Wednesday; policy committee and general assembly of the Construction League of the United States, Thursday, and executive committee of the American Institute of Architects, Saturday.

These organizations are expected to assemble ammunition to be presented should the code hearing be reopened. Deputy Administrator Malcolm Muir said yesterday he would study new data presented since hearings on the construction code ended a month ago.

He said if he finds that a hearing would clarify the issues he will call such a hearing. He added, however, that he believed difficulties would be ironed out as soon as labor understood that labor and employe problems would be handled by no committees on which labor is not represented.

Simultaneously he announced the NRA is considering establishing a labor board within the construction industry to carry on labor arbitration, and declared labor will have equal representation on all boards whose business it is to decide wage and working conditions.

Muir, however, asserted labor's demands for a code calling for payment of Public Works Administration or union skilled-labor wages, whichever is higher, would not be considered. He agreed with the Construction League that such a wage scale would be illegal.

"The legal department has ruled that this recovery law is for the purpose of raising unskilled minimum wages and fixing maximum hours," he said. "There is nothing in the law which permits the NRA to write into these codes a scale of wages for semiskilled and skilled labor."

The code now under consideration is substantially that proposed by the Construction League. Labor is opposing it with demands for a 30-hour week instead of a 40-hour week, the establishment of rates of pay for all types of skilled work and equal representation on any governing body. The Construction League proposal is for one code covering all types of construction from homes and office buildings to roads and bridges. The labor interests are seeking a separate code for building construction.

"The construction industry is suffering because of lack of a code to prevent cut-throat competition," E. J. Harding, managing director of the Associated General Contractors, said in a statement. "Three months ago the industry hoped it would get a start on the road to recovery along with other major industries Delay in the adoption of the code, however, has created a state of uncertainty in the industry."

Gen. Drum Cites Lesson of Peace

Participates in Indiana Shrine Ceremony.

Indianapolis, Nov. 11 (AP).—If the millenium of peace is ever found, it must originate in the heartfelt understanding of peoples, declared Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum here today at the dedication of a shrine room of the Indiana World War Memorial.

The deputy chief of staff of the Army said many persons striving for peace ignore this age-old lesson.

The shrine room in the $12,000,000 war memorial was the scene of the unveiling of the portraits of six allied commanders. Sergt. Samuel Woodfill, World War hero, unveiled the portrait of Gen. John J. Pershing.

Mother and Baby Burn in Fire Hall

Only Full-Time Firemen Fails to Save Kin.

Eaton Rapids, Mich., Nov. 11 (AP). Mrs. Albert Lambert and her infant son were burned to death today when fire destroyed the Eaton Rapids Fire Hall.

The fire followed explosion of a gasoline stove in the living quarters above the hall occupied by Lambert, the town's only full-time fireman, and his family. Three other children escaped uninjured.

Lambert was driven back by the flames as he tried to reach his wife and baby.

Wife Tickled Him To Cause Wreck, Says Motorman

Chicago, Nov. 11 (AP).—Joseph Klima, a street car motorman, does not enjoy being tickled by his wife, Pauline.

Joseph recently sued Pauline for divorce, alleging she boarded the street cars he was driving and tickled him in the hope of causing an accident.

Yesterday Mrs. Klima went to court to charge that Klima's half-brothers struck her when she tried to get in her husband's automobile to seek a reconciliation.

The judge, however, dismissed the defendants after the accused men said they had barred her from the motor car at the request of Klima, who said he feared his wife would tickle him again.

Basis of Slum Clearance Told By Committee

7 Major Points Outlined by Executive Group Following Study.

Seven basic points on which rests selection of sites for low-cost housing and slum clearance projects were announced yesterday by the executive committee studying the problem.

As divulged by John Nolen, jr., executive vice chairman, these are the tests which proposed sites will have to meet:

Conformity to the general city plan.

Relationship to the section's zoning and general surroundings and whether a housing "demonstration" on the site will be in harmony with the neighborhood's character.

Accessibility to improved streets, bus and street car transportation, shopping areas and places of employment.

Accessibility to schools and recreation centers.

Requirements such as water, gas and electrical supply.

The effect on reducing disease, lowering delinquency and otherwise removing conditions making city slums a breeding place for crime and disease.

Finally, probable unit cost of sites in relation to earning power for low cost housing.

Headed by Commissioner Luther H. Reichelderfer, the committee is studying several sites offered by real estate firms, and individual owners. Despite several offers to establish housing projects in near-by Maryland, all sites are in the District.

A meeting of the general advisory committee will be held the latter part of next week, when additional sites will be brought up for discussion.

Parachute Jumper Killed at Festival

Ottawa, Ill., Nov. 11 (AP).—William Hem, 24, of Chicago, was killed today when he made a parachute jump from an airplane as part of the celebration for the dedication of a new bridge across the Illinois River.

Hem's neck and both legs were broken when he landed on the roof of Ottawa High School. He left the plane at a height of 1,400 feet, but his parachute failed to open until he was 400 feet from the ground.

He is survived by his father, W. H. Hem, of New York.

Church Ousts Berlin Pastor For Fighting Anti-Semitism

Move Seen as Blow to Hitler Conference With Opponents.

Berlin, Nov. 11 (AP).—Because he opposed anti-Semitism in the church, the Rev. Martin Niemaeller, a former submarine captain and long a member of the Nazi party, was summarily suspended from his pastorate today by the Rev. Joachim Hossenfelder, president of the Nazi German Christian movement.

The Rev. Martin Niemaeller, who won the Iron Cross for bravery in the World War, urged members of his congregation every Sunday to vote "yes" in tomorrow's plebiscite on the government's foreign policy, but opposed anti-Semitism in the church on the grounds that it is incompatible with the teachings of Christ.

In his congregation are Count Schwerin von Krosigk and Prof. Julius Curtius, former minister of foreign affairs.

Niemaeller also was president of the Pastors Emergency Federation, which comprises 3,000 minister who indorsed the new political regime, but opposed attempts of the German Christians to "regiment the church."

His suspension comes at the very moment when, through the efforts of the Rev. S. McFarland, of New York, Chancellor Hitler agreed to meet the leaders of those opposing the German Christians.

Friends of the pastor believe his suspension is a move by Dr. Hossenfelder to make Hitler's reception of him impossible, as the chancellor can not very well receive a suspended man, they said.

Another popular pastor, E. F. Babernau, who also belongs to the opposition group, likewise was suspended tonight.

Long Attacks Newspapers, Favors Ad Tax

Senator, in Last Speech of Louisiana Tour, Says NRA Has Failed.

Marksville, La., Nov. 11 (AP).—Senator Huey P. Long closed a week's stump tour here today among friendly French Acadians in sharp contrast to his turbulent meetings in other parts of the State.

He aimed his fire in the closing speech at newspapers, assailing publishers opposed to his policies, and declaring he would levy a tax on advertising against newspapers with more than 20,000 weekly circulation.

Under his proposed program he said 60 per cent of the taxes would be taken off the big man and all of the taxes would be taken off of the little man. He also hit at the Roosevelt Administration, saying:

"I had hoped the NRA would work, but it won't. You can't take the blood from a dying man and give it to another dying man and expect them both to live."

His speech was cheered by his audience and there was not a semblance of disorder such as occurred last night in Alexandria, when stench bombs, rotten eggs and soft fruit were hurled to the speaker's stand. His other meetings were marred by hecklers who emitted boos and cat calls.

He returned to New Orleans tonight to prepare for the opening of the United States Senate committee investigation into the election of Senator John Overton.

The investigation will be resumed here Monday, with Senator Long acting as chief counsel for Senator Overton, who is charged by Former Senator Edwin Broussard with having been elected through fraud.

"Black Shirts" Start Drive

"American Facisti," Led by Former Klansmen, Seek Members.

Atlanta, Nov. 11 (AP).—Henry J. Norton, of Atlanta, today announced plans for Nation-wide organization of the American Facisti Order of Black Shirts, with an official personnel which he said would include for the most part former high-ranking members of the Ku Klux Klan.

Norton's announcement, which listed him as president of the organization, said a membership campaign would be launched tomorrow in 36 principal cities of the country with the aid of newspaper advertisements. Among the cities named as centers for the drive are Cleveland, Pittsburgh, New York, Baltimore and Chattanooga. National headquarters will be in Atlanta.

"We now have 34,000 card members," Norton said today. "We propose to enlist all who wish to join and who subscribe to our tenets. Ours is a militant movement for white supremacy, for patriotism and to fight Communism. We believe in free speech, but lawful free speech. We are a benevolent fraternity."

'Ketchup Killer' Suspect Faces Second Charge

Chicago, Nov. 11 (AP).—Charles Stein, 23, whose liking for steaks with ketchup, resulted in a murder accusation against him, today was accused of another robbery in his old home town, Lawrenceburg, Ind.

Stein, arrested a few days ago and identified by victims of five robberies, yesterday was named by officers as the man who killed a restaurant cook during a holdup. Authorities said they found fingerprints identical with Stein's on a bottle of ketchup after he had ordered a steak.

New Member Drive Opened By Red Cross

President Pleads for Aid; Roll of 5,000,000 Set as Goal.

With a goal of 5,000,000, the American Red Cross yesterday opened its annual roll call for members.

Officially inaugurated by President Roosevelt in an appeal to the country, the first day ended with a radio dramatization of the part the Red Cross has played in saving lives, in rehabilitating disaster-swept countries and in helping stricken families back to happy lives.

In past years the membership has reached an average of 4,000,000 during each drive. This year, according to John Barton Payne, National chairman, efforts are being redoubled, because the need is so much greater.

Any Amount Welcome.

The campaign, which will close on Thanksgiving Day, will accept any amount, even as little as $1 a year, for membership. Each donor receives a Red Cross button and a membership card.

The radio program, which was broadcast from New York and Washington, presented three "first-person" stories of Red Cross service.

Seventeen-year-old Fred Cushman, of Tarrytown, N. Y., described how he saved a child from drowning in the Hudson River because of his Red Cross live-saving training.

Miss Elizabeth Lowry, Red Cross public health nurse, of Lebanon, Va., told how she battled through a blizzard one night to aid 12 men injured in the explosion of a mountain grist mill.

A Los Angeles mother, whose husband was killed in the March earthquake, told how the Red Cross provided a home and support for her and her children.

117 Disasters in Year.

Payne, concluding the radio program, said that the Red Cross had given relief in 117 disasters during the last year.

"At this moment 3,700 Red Cross chapters and 10,000 branches stand guard over every city, village, hamlet and home in the land, ready for instant assistance," he said. "Civilized society could hardly get along without the Red Cross, which does so much to remove fear and panic from stricken people."

President Roosevelt said:

"When our people in any section of the country are faced with the perils and suffering which follow so swiftly in the wake of disaster, they look with one accord to the American Red Cross for instant and efficient relief. They have never looked in vain.

"I earnestly urge you to respond most generously to the annual Red Cross roll call. We must do our part to keep the Red Cross ready, day or night, for service."

First Lady Gets Doll.

One of the features of the day was the presentation to Mrs. Roosevelt of a Japanese doll, which the little Japanese girl donors hoped she "will enjoy looking at."

7 Die, Many Hurt In N. Y. Snowstorm

5-Inch Fall Blocks Traffic on Roads and in Air.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 11 (AP).—The first major snow storm of the season swept over western New York today, bringing death to seven persons, injuries to many others and tying up traffic on the highways and in the air.

Five inches of snow fell. Street car and automobile traffic in Rochester was impeded. In rural districts many roads were reported virtually impassable.

Nelson E. Hacker, 32; Andrew C. Dreier, jr., 27, and Edward Herr, 29, Rochester fishermen, perished in the waters of Blind Sodus Bay, near here, as the storm whipped up the waters.

Recluse Accused In Family's Death

Couple and Two Children Believed Slain.

Dallas, Texas, Nov. 11 (AP).—A rotted sack, containing bits of clothing, and a bullet hole in the wall of a small East Texas cabin led officers to file murder charges today against George Patton, 51-year-old recluse, in connection with the disappearance of a family of four.

Jess Sweeten, Henderson County sheriff, who brought Patton here for questioning nine days ago, ordered that the charges be filed at Athens, after he had resumed an intermittent investigation of the whereabouts of J. W. McGehee, 25; his wife, Carrie McGehee, 21, and their two children, a boy, 5, and a girl, 2.

The family was last heard of on Patton's farm in October, 1932.

Farmer Admits Guilt In Urschel Hoax Plot

Dallas, Texas, Nov. 11 (AP).—J. A. Morgan, Wise County farmer, who said a "crazy idea" impelled him to send letters to Charles F. Urschel, kidnaped Oklahoma City oil millionaire, relating to a part of his ransom money, pleaded guilty to a mail fraud charge today and was remanded to jail to await action of the Federal grand jury.

Morgan sent a letter to Urschel setting forth that almost $70,000 of the ransom money was buried on his farm. Upon his arrest, he said the statement was untrue.

Huge Fund Expended by Ickes In Fast Time to Aid Recovery

Balance of $646,513,016 Expected to Be Allotted Before Christmas.

Secretary Ickes, administrator of public works, to whom was assigned the job of distributing $3,300,000,000 throughout the Nation for the employment of jobless men, has allotted $2,663,486,984 during the eighteen weeks since assuming command of the P. W. A.

Public Works Administration officials pointed out yesterday that allotment of this vast sum to speed employment and recovery had been accomplished in record time.

The average daily allotments for the past 126 days has been $21,059,420. Continuing at the same rate the entire $3,300,000,000 appropriation will have been distributed before Christmas.

Allotments for Federal projects amount to $2,208,624,811. These include $400,000,000 from the P. W. A. for immediate work relief to be administered by the new Civil Works Administration. Allotments for non-Federal projects total $444,862,173.

A statement by the Public Works Administration expressed gratification at reports showing decreases in unemployment and increases in contract values covering public works projects.

"Public works dollars now are flowing into weekly pay envelopes in every section of the country with increasing velocity, with approximately two persons receiving indirect or industrial employment for each person recalled to work on a public works construction site," the statement asserted.

Allotments have been made for about 700 non-Federal projects. Federal projects, including Federal aid highways, number approximately 1,000.

It was announced the Public Works Administration is directing its energies toward aiding heavy industries and building trades, and it is intended that a considerable portion of the $646,512,016 left of the administration's funds will be allotted to construction provided through the housing corporation.

Ousted Trade Official Loses In Pay Decision

Acting Comptroller Holds W. H. Humphrey Is Removed.

In anticlimax to the announcement of William E. Humphrey that he will sue for the salary of his successor on the Federal Trade Commission, Acting Comptroller General R. L. Golze yesterday ruled the ousted commissioner is no longer entitled to his salary.

The decision was based on the removal of a general appraiser under similar circumstances, in an interpretation of the customs administrative act of 1890.

"You are hereby advised," Golze wrote to the Federal Trade Commission disbursing clerk, "that Mr. Mathews' right to salary as a member of the Federal Trade Commission is not now to be questioned because of any contention to the effect that there existed no vacancy to which he could be appointed."

In recognizing Humphrey's removal, the commission rejected his formal demand for continuance of his salary, but asked the Comptroller General for the ruling to clear the books.

The ruling concerned the first payment of salary to George C. Mathews, named successor to Humphrey by President Roosevelt.

Humphrey announced Friday he would sue for the salary of Mathews in the United States Court of Claims to obtain a court ruling on his removal.

In his ruling, for which he cited case precedents, Golze held the President apparently could remove an officer without stating the cause of removal as being for inefficiency, neglect or malfeasance. Humphrey has contended he could be removed only on these charges, none of which were alleged by President Roosevelt.

Oklahoma City, Nov. 11 (AP).—U. S. District Attorney Herbert K. Hyde charged tonight salesmen for Gov. W. H. Murray's weekly newspaper, The Blue Valley Farmer, have threatened Federal relief workers with loss of their jobs unless they subscribe to it.

"It's an outrage of which I have absolute evidence," Hyde said as he left for Washington with information on administration of Federal relief funds in Oklahoma.

"You know that is a lie," Gov. Murray declared when advised of Hyde's statement. "He knows that is a lie and so does everybody else."

Two Boys in Tiny Plane Start 10,000-Mile Flight to Yucatan

Search of Mayan Ruins Plan of New Jersey Adventurers.

Newark N. J., Nov. 11 (AP).—A tiny red monoplane no more than 30 feet long soared away from Newark airport today on the first leg of a planned 10,000-mile flight to the Yucatan peninsula. From within its cramped cabin, two 19-year-old Westfield boys waved a confident farewell.

The pilot, Bob Buck, is holder of many junior air records. His companion, Robert F. Nixon, jr., is going along "just for the ride."

The boys hope to search the most desolate wastes of the Yucatan for new relics of ancient Mayan civilization.

The boys will stop in St. Louis to have a new motor installed in their plane. Thence they will fly to Los Angeles, then down to Mexico City and from there into the Yucatan. They plan to be gone from three to six months.

4 Boys, 1 Only 9, Rob 200-Pound Man

Chicago, Nov. 11 (AP).—The criminal careers of four boys, the youngest of whom is 9 years old, were at a standstill today after their victim, a 200-pound man, told police they pounced on him and robbed him of $8.

All four were taken into custody last night and Sergeant James Daily said all confessed and one, a lad of 13, claimed to be the leader.

Ickes, Hopkins Agree on Work Classification

New Job Creating Agency Will Not Conflect With P. W. A.

The line of demarkation between projects which will be started in the Federal Government's plan to put 4,000,000 men to work by December 15, and those for which money will be advanced to States and municipalities by the Public Works Administration was drawn at a conference of departmental officials yesterday.

Secretary Ickes, Public Works Administrator, said that, roughly, the line will mean that no contract work will be undertaken by the Civil Works Administration, which is to provide jobs for the 4,000,000. The C. W. A. is headed by Harry L. Hopkins, Relief Administrator.

On the other hand, civil works projects will be confined solely to "force accounts," or the hiring of day labor, Ickes explained.

"Projects which will come under the Civil Works Administration are those which may be classified as minor in character," he said.

Both Secretary Ickes and Hopkins were emphatic in stressing that municipalities which already have submitted applications to the Public Works Administration will not be permitted to switch to the C. W. A., but if officials of P. W. A. decide there are projects belonging properly in the province of the Civil Works Administration, they may be assigned to the latter.

Ickes also declared emphatically that municipalities withdrawing projects already submitted to the Public Works Administration will not be permitted to renew them.

Hopkins said that if a project is withdrawn from the Public Works Administration it will not be considered by the C. W. A.

Wage rates to be paid workers employed on CWA works will be the same as those required by the PWA.

Hopkins said that it is hoped that from 500,000 to 1,000,000 men can be put to work speedily on various Federal projects.

On local projects men will be put to work on sewers, water mains, road and street repairs, construction of feeder roads, construction of new parks and playgrounds, swimming pools, drainage and sanitary work, and many other minor jobs.

Hopkins has called a meeting for next Wednesday of representatives of every State and the District of Columbia.

Roosevelt Gagging Press, Says Fish

New Yorker Holds Radio Also Muzzled.

President Roosevelt and his aids yesterday were charged by Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, with attempting to censor the National press and muzzle criticism of Administration policies, according to the Associated Press.

"No administration in the history of the republic has ever dared until now to attempt to censor the public press in times of peace," Fish said in a statement, adding:

"This Administration, through licensing of the radio broadcasting companies, has succeeded very largely in shutting out adverse criticism and at the same time enveloping the United States with a continuous sound of ballyhoo, hallelujah and propaganda in behalf of the Roosevelt experiments toward State Socialism."

Two other alleged members of the gang, Julian (Babe) Jones and Gale Swolley, also are held. Police have named "Handsome Jack" Klutas, University of Illinois graduate, as leader of the gang.

England's War Scars Linger With One Generation 'Lost'

Women Lack Husbands and Young Leadership Grows Scarce.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

London, Nov. 4 (By mail).—"We can't get married; there aren't enough men. We may as well work," young women say in England. Everyone knew it was true after the war, but the lost generation is still lost. Men who by now would have been launched in business, ready to marry, are lying under their crosses or drifting in rehabilitation hospitals.

Not only are women lacking husbands. Speak of politics and someone will say, "There are no strong younger men ready to take over command."

"Ramsay MacDonald is done," is one comment. "But we have no one ready to carry on. The best were taken."

700,000 Men Killed.

There has been overmuch sentiment about "the flower of England cut off," but underneath are the practical facts that boys from 18 up filled the ranks of Kitchener's army, and that in the long stretch before conscription in 1917, it was the best who volunteered. Younger men were put in the front ranks; younger men took more risks. Seven hundred thousand British men were killed, the majority young men and boys.

So now English women marry men much older, when they are lucky. Or else they find work, take a flat in town and a hobby, fill the fields in sports, build up a consoling wall of small interests, small holidays, books, dogs, and miniature cars.

England's young women look self-reliant, with their tailored clothes, cropped hair, and assertive manner. But beneath that exterior, English women are still waiting for their husbands to grow up.

Many Unadjusted Men.

Older women, married during the war, are many of them waiting for their actual husbands to come out of the hospital. Besides all the men needing physical treatment, the last war left a new type of disabled men, their nerves strung by noise and gas. These men, at neurological hospitals for occupational treatment, are still trying to adjust to normal life. Bodies can be patched as nerves can not. The men work in the hospital shops at carpentry, shoemaking, tailoring, trying not only to learn a new trade but to gain stability.

A man in one of these hospitals was buried alive for three days at the front. He is indelibly marked by the experience. He is bodily sound and perfectly sane, but he has no control over his nerves. The slightest touch of pleasure or worry cuts his control-lines loose, and leaves him twisted and shaken.

So it is with many of the men, who have found that they can't stand ordinary life. They cobble their wives' and children's shoes, make furniture, baskets and toys for their families. But they can't live in the homes they furnish. These men being clear-minded, not one who is unmarried would consider involving a woman in his post-war entanglements.

The number of men disabled shows the extent of effect. Over 1,500,000 men received compensation after the war, and new cases have been added yearly.

Pensioners Dying Rapidly.

The men in hospitals want the homes they can't have, just as the women do. But at least England has carried the financial end of their troubles, to the tune of £1,100,000 for pensions alone. Pensions are, in total, lowering now, on a definite curve, while those of many other countries still are towering. Disabled war survivors are dying at the rate of 7,000 a year, and pensioned war orphans are coming of age.

Instead of a vast number of veterans getting government money for ailments they claim are related to war servies, such as tuberculosis, England grants pensions for about 200 late claims annually out of 2,000 applications. This comparatively low number is due to the health insurance system, by which the medical records of all men who have worked can be traced back to 1912; due to the panel of expert surgeons, who examine all questionable cases, and because pensions are handled under royal warrant, so that politics and parliamentary debate can not affect them.

Same Policies Hold.

Through changes of government, the Ministry of Pensions has maintained the same policies. Thus the veterans are not in the unsettling position of having money given them and then taken away, pensions increased and decreased.

"We have tried to aim primarily at security and stability for the veterans," a high official of the Ministry of Pensions says. "We have not cut down a single rate of pension during the depression."

The total amount of pensions lessens in natural course in all directions. Besides the service men, the number of war orphans has been reduced from 1,780,000 to 79,650. One hundred and thirty thousand war widows receive pensions, against 260,000 in the past.

As the burden of the war is passing, so the new generation is coming on. The young men are not yet old enough, however, for responsible government posts. The number of marriagable men lags far behind the women. There remains in the age-ranks of England, a gulf of missing men.

Union College Given Library

Daughter Donates Books of Judge Cullen, of Brooklyn.

The 2,037-volume library of the late Judge Edgar Montgomery Cullen, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been presented to Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., by Miss Margaret Cullen, 1600 Massachusetts avenue northwest, sister of Judge Cullen, it was learned here yesterday.

Another brother, an alumnus of Union College, had previously presented the institution with a 2,500 collection. Judge Cullen, although not on alumnus of Union College, had received the honorary degree of doctor of laws from the college in 1905.

Value of the collection was estimated by the college librarian at $25,000, "even in this day of deflated values."

The new Cullen collection is mainly history, biography, general literature and poetry. In addition to sets of works of standard authors and historians, there are a number of valuable fiftheenth and sixteenth century books and plays.

Rockefeller Rum Plan Approved

Action Taken at National Parley on Government.

Atlantic City, N. J., Nov. 11 (AP). The Rockefeller plan, which combines local option restoration and modified State monopoly of sales, for legal control of liquor after repeal, was indorsed today by the National Conference on Government.

Albert Scott, co-author of the Rockefeller report on liquor control, and Prof. Yandell Henderson, of Yale, spoke in favor of the plan.

The only exception was Pierre S. duPont, of Delaware, liquor commissioner in his home State who favored a system of licensing the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages.

Watchman, in Pagan Dream, Reads Symbols From Stone

New Classical Meaning Is Given Architecture in U.S. Building.

It has remained for a watchman at the new Department of Justice Building to translate from stone the meaning of the classical Greek structure's Athenian court, which is rapidly nearing completion. He is Leonard Clark, a graduate of Cornell, mechanical engineer, globe trotter, student of mythology and now, at 62 and by the whim of fate, a watchman.

Standing in the unfinished east portals yesterday, the burly scholar-engineer gave his interpretation of the "modern symphony in Alabama limestone." It is strictly his own interpretation, one which was foreign to the architects when they planned the court.

Clark's conception, based upon study of classic architecture in many years of work and travel abroad, was so highly commended by the building's designers and contractors that he has started work on a pamphlet describing other interesting features of the building at Ninth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

Like the Athenian court of the Parthenon, he points out, Court A of the Department of Justice stands four square to the cardinal points of the compass. Over the east portals the sun will rise and beyond the west portals it will set.

On the south facade is the abode of Zeus, supported by four Doric columns representing faith, virtue, truth and power. In the tympanum above is blocked out in stone the outline of his eagle, which faces the rising sun.

Directly opposite, on the north facade, will reside Athena, daughter of Zeus, who, legend says, sprang from his head in full armor. The four Doric columns upholding her Olympian abode typify loyalty, love, beauty and grace. Above the goddess Athena is the "Athenian Marriage Tract."

The two deities will look down upon the court's elevated fountain, where, given free rein, the imagination will supply Apollo coming each morning to lave in the "Bowl of Purity."

Above the thrones of Zeus and Athena and extending around the wall is a promenade, reminiscent of a feudal castle's embattlements. After the structure is occupied next year they may be littered with prosaic sandwich wrappings and chattering stenographers. Clark, as he looked aloft, enjoyed a pagan dream.

It was morn and he saw Grecian maidens parading around the wall, the "Walk of Hope," in silent, prayerful procession, come to look upon the divine Apollo in his morning bath.

"They cast wreaths of laurel into his bath in the 'Bowl of Purity.'" said the watchman, "and if Apollo touched one, the maiden's prayer that she be blessed with an Apollo-like mate was answered."

He consign's the court's four powers to Ceres, Poseidon, Pluto and Ares, who served in the Olympian Council with Zeus and Athena. The four corner entrances to the court are the portals of the council's rooms.

Probably the chief threat against this panoramic vision will be the whining gears and raucous horns of automobiles going to and fro in the court's driveway. It may be necessary to make symbols of them in order to preserve the unity.

U. S. Awards Beef Contract

Arizona Firm to Supply 400,000 Pounds of Canned Roast.

The Federal Emergency Relief Corporation yesterday announced its first contract award for beef under the buying program of the Surplus Relief Corporation, awarding a contract for 400,000 pounds of canned fresh roast beef to the Tovrea Packing Co., of Phoenix, Ariz.

The price paid was 16.31 cents a pound. The packing company agreed to pay cattlemen $2.50 per hundred pounds for cows, exclusive of transportation charges.

The Government stipulated that bidders should declare the price they would pay for cattle, but most of the bids opened last Monday failed to include such declaration.

The first 40,000 pounds of canned beef is to be delivered in 45 days and additional deliveries of 40,000 pounds are scheduled at two-week intervals. The corporation is negotiating with the Tovrea Co. for additional cannel beef.

A contract will be awarded soon on the conversion of 7,000,000 pounds of tub butter now stored at Jersey City, N. J., into pound portions. Bids will be opened on packing 10,000,000 pounds of butter held in storage in Chicago into pound packages.

Bids on packing the butter at Jersey City ranged from ¾ cent to 1⅛ cents per pound.

District Plans To Create Jobs Wait Approval

Officials Confer Wednesday on Campaign Against Unemployment.

Jobs for several thousand men will be provided in a program of public improvements drafted by District officials for approval of the newly created Civil Works Administration under the direction of Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator.

The number of jobs, their character and duration, as well as the total amount which will be expended, will depend on approval of Federal relief officials.

District and State and municipal officials are to confer Wednesday with Mr. Hopkins to discuss the new drive to increase employment. George S. Wilson, director of public welfare, will head the District group. Others expected to attend are Leroy S. Halbert, director of emergency relief; Arthur Rosichan, director of transient relief; Daniel J. Donovan, auditor, and the heads of departments which have submitted projects.

Work programs of the various departments are to be collected by Capt. Howard F. Clark, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, for submission to the Commissioners tomorrow. Projects prepared for highways, water, sewer, schools, playgrounds, public parks and those concerned with maintenance of District buildings and institutions will cost $5,000,000 or more, it is estimated.

Texas Guinan Comes Back To Broadway

Body of Night Club Queen Greeted by No Bands in Dingy Dawn.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—They brought Texas Guinan back to Broadway today—in a silver coffin.

There were no bright lights; no bands blaring; no tophatted men and ermine-wrapped women scurrying home before sun up.

It was the cold gray of the dawn—a dingy dawn.

Out of the baggage car at the Pennsylvania Station—with a crowd that belongs to Broadway standing around—the body of the most famous of all night club queens was placed in a hearse, taken slowly up the "main stem" to the funeral home at Sixty-sixth street where Fatty Arbuckle, Rudolf Valentino and other celebrities have lain in state.

Private Service Planned.

In a plain silver coffin, with a white band of ribbon around it, the crowds during the day had their last view of the girl from Texas who soared brilliantly with prohibition.

Tomorrow afternoon—five days after the land ruled out prohibition—the family will hold private services for Texas. Burial probably will be Monday.

Among the first to pass the bier was James Ruppert, owner of the New York Yankees and the town's largest brewer.

Texas had said, once, she wanted a funeral in the height of night club fashion—noise, whoopee, liquor.

But at the funeral home, all was quiet.

Rosary in Hand.

The body was clad in a white beaded chiffon. One hand clasped a rosary. On the third finger of the hand was a large diamond. Around the neck was a diamond pendant. On the shoulder of the shroud was a spray of artificial orchids.

Not until noon were the doors of the funeral home opened.

Within the first half hour half a thousand persons trod past the bier of Texas—who died suddenly in Vancouver last Sunday, after an emergency operation.

Around the coffin were wreaths from many night clubs. On the lid was inscribed:

"Mary L. C. 'Texas' Guinan."

Jack Pearl, the comedian, stopped in the line, bent over the casket, and said:

"She was the most lovable and honorable girl that Broadway has ever known. When anyone needed a friend, he could go to Tex and she would never turn him down."

Relatives said he left home in apparent good health.

A native of Illinois, Mr. Dorr came here in 1912, living at Mount Rainier. Several years ago he moved to Colmar Manor and then to East Hyattsville.

An active church worker, he assisted in establishing Baptist churches in Mount Rainier and Colmar Manor. He was a charter member of both.

Besides his widow, Mrs. Mary Dorr, he is survived by one son, Philip C. Dorr, of Mount Rainier, and a sister, Mrs. Jennie Dorr, of Albany, N. Y. Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

C. W. Hurdle Dies; Long in Kensington

De Valera Invited To Seek Relection

Ulster Republicans Submit Plea to President.

Dublin, Irish Free State, Nov. 11 (AP).—Reports circulated here today that a conference of Republicans from "the six counties"—otherwise Ulster—has invited President De Valera to stand as a candidate in the northern Ireland elections November 30.

The move was regarded as significant in view of De Valera's statement in the Fianna Fail convention Thursday, that it was not his will that he ceased to be a representative of the people of North Ireland. At the same time he declared if they wished him to represent them again he was ready.

Art Treasures Acquired by Metropolitan Museum

Two great art treasures purchased by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City, from the Soviet government. They are the "Crucifixion" and the "Last Judgment," forming a diptych, by the fifteenth century Flemish master, Hubert van Eyck, which were in the former Imperial Hermitage Museum, Leningrad. Work by this artist is exceedingly rare, and according to Herbert E. Winlock, director of the museum, the diptych is the most important ever purchased by the museum out of its funds. It was painted about 1417. Its early history is veiled in mystery. Negotiations for its purchase took four years.

NRA Classes in D. C. Schools "Surprise" to Senator King

Intimates Investigation by Congress Group as Propaganda.

Expressing "surprise" that District of Columbia schools have initiated classes to outline the purpose, operation and results of the NRA, Chairman William H. King, of the Senate District Committee, said last night he would "look into the matter at once."

While the chairman, who has always vigorously opposed use of "propaganda" of any kind in the public schools, was studying the instruction courses, Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou said the instruction would continue indefinitely.

"We have received no protest because of the inauguration of this program," said Dr. Ballou. "We shall continue it as long as there is a need for it. The work was not confined to Education Week."

Requested by Teachers.

Walter E. Myer, editor of the Civic Education Service, which provides a current events weekly news sheet for schools all over the country, explained that the article on the recovery administration had been included in the service at the request of a specially appointed committee of District teachers.

The service includes three publications, one for junior high schools, one for senior high schools, and one for teachers' colleges. For several weeks NRA developments have been followed in the news sheet for teachers' colleges.

The publications designed for the two high school groups contained for the first time this week an outline of NRA policies.

The purpose is to present impartially the accomplishments of the recovery program. As explained by Dr. Stephen E. Kramer, assistant superintendent of education, it is "not an argument as to whether the NRA is good or bad; it is a presentation of what we hope to get out of the NRA."

Questions and Answers.

The article designed for senior high school students opens by saying:

"The NRA, five months after its establishment into law, has reached a critical stage. For a while it was universally acclaimed. People expected miracles of it. They expected impossible results. There was very little criticism. It has, indeed, achieved a great deal."

The article then traces the accomplishments of the NRA by a series of questions and answers, among which was one asking: "How did the NRA deal with the situation which had developed?" In answering the queery, after tracing the organization of trade associations to fix standards of wages and hours of labor, the article continues:

"It thus became possible for the Government and the leaders in each industry to raise wages in the industry, to shorten hours and prevent those unfair practices which were throttling business enterprise."

"Has the NRA resulted in increased prices?"

"Yes, it probably has."

"Are the workers, then, whose wages have not been raised, worse off than they were before?" it was asked, after explaining how wages in the low brackets were raised while those above the minimum were not.

"Yes. If they receive the same amount of money and if they have to pay more for their living, they are not so well off."

Jones Is Chairman.

George F. Jones, head of the history department of all District high schools, is chairman of the committee which requested the material and subsequently edited it.

In pointing out to high school teachers the instruction work expected of them in the new courses, Dr. Ballou explained:

"The program should be of an informative rather than of an argumentative nature. It is hoped by this plan to bring to all pupils an intelligent understanding of the program looking to industrial and financial recovery."

Stratosphere Hop At Fair Canceled

Exposition's Closing, Bad Weather, Balk Plan.

Chicago, Nov. 11 (AP).—The projected balloon ascension into the stratosphere by Lieut. Comdr. T. G. W. Settle and his aid, Maj. Chester L. Fordney, from the Century of Progress grounds has been called off.

Because the fair closes tomorrow and weather conditions prevent a take-off before that time, sponsors said the start from the fair grounds will not be made.

The huge balloon, its gondola and scientific equipment will be crated for shipment back to Akron, where the bag was constructed.

Board Explains Status of Jobs In Civil Service

Holds Emergency Agencies Are Not Bound by Eligible Lists.

The Civil Service Commission "has no authority to require agencies to make appointments from its eligible lists," a commission announcement said yesterday.

"Appointments to the new emergency," the statement revealed, "the greater part of them without regard to the civil service law and regulations, more than equaled the number dropped from the regular establishments in retrenchment."

Officials revealed the statement was intended to discredit published reports that there was a turnover of 150,000 persons in the Government service from March 1 to September 30, last. The explanation contended constant adding and dropping of temporary employes accounted for two-thirds of the personnel changes.

"The actual turnover in the permanent force of the Federal executive civil service during the seven months from March 1 to September 30, 1933," the statement added, "was considerably less than the turnover in normally properous times.

"It is interesting to compare what took place in the same seven months of 1932. The reports show in that 1932 period 123,872 additions and 122,248 separations. But this can not be called turnover any more than the 1933 figures can be used to show turnover. In the seven months of 1932, 94,025 of the additions and 106,144 of the separations are accounted for by the constant coming and going of temporary employes on short jobs."

There are more than 100,000 Federal positions, the statement reported, outside civil service rules.

Woman, 128, Hopes to Outlive Present Social "Revolution"

Her Longevity Ascribed to Boast She Never Did Day's Work.

Santa Ana, Calif., Nov 11 (AP). Her now faded eyes have seen troublous times of many wars and revolutions, but today, on her 128th birthday, Senora Martina De La Rosa, expressed hope for another quarter century of life so she might see the outcome of the present Social "revolution."

"Life is a great thing," said the venerable Mexican woman, who lives at Gloriette, near here. "The longer you live the greater is the desire to stay on this earth—if you have good health and no worry."

Feeble and nearly blind, she enjoys life still, but likes best to hark back to the days when romance, guitar music and soft voices in serenades filled the patio of her father's home.

She does not believe work makes for longevity. When asked for the secret of age, she recalled that her father was a wealthy rancher in Mexico, and that she never has done a day's work in her 128 years.

Senora De La Rosa born in Mexico in 1805, she and her relatives say. She tells of remembering the Mexican rebellion against Spain, the annexation of California by the United States, the exploits of Emperor Augustin De Iturbide and deeds of Antonio Lopez De Santa Ana.

She has given birth to 13 children, her youngest being 58years of age, and was born when Senor De La Rosa was 70 years old, she said.

Cave of "Peking Man" Gives Up New Finds

Peiping, Nov. 11 (AP).—Important discoveries made in the cave 40 miles from Peiping which yielded a prehistoric fossil of the Peking man were announced today by Dr. Davidson Black, research worker of the Rockefeller Institute.

They show, Dr. Black, said, that the first inhabitants of the cave were prehistoric baboons, a species of hyena and other animals now extinct.

Depreciation Issue of City Gas Valuation

Board and Companies Far Apart on Cost of Reproduction.

Allowances to be made for depreciation of physical properties of the gas companies stood out as a major question as commission and company counsel yesterday prepared to begin tomorrow morning the third week of the gas valuation hearings before the Public Utilities commission.

Representatives of the Washington and Georgetown Gas Light companies have claimed they would justify a valuation in excess of $30,000,000. They already have presented to the commission in testimony and exhibits a claim of $22,358,833 as the reproduction cost of the companies. To this has been added an estimated value of $3,289,000 for land. Several other items are to be added to this $25,647,833, including going concern and other intangibles.

Deductible Items.

Reproduction cost of the physical properties has been estimated by commission experts at $21,315,667, from which they contend there should be deducted $400,802 representing property not used or useful and $385,279 representing services paid for directly by consumers, such as payment of cost of installing services. Although cost of such installations was paid for by consumers, the companies claim the cost in their valuation.

Divergence of theories and claims, however, is exemplified in the different estimates and treatment of depreciation. The company contends that so long as their plant functions it should be valued as not having suffered any depreciation, with certain exceptions. The total admitted depreciation, not shown officially in the hearings, is said to be considerably less than $1,000,000.

Apart on Depreciation.

Deduction of depreciation, as estimated by the commission, reduces the $21,315,667 preliminary reproduction figure of commission experts to $14,753,417. With other deductions carried forward at the same rate of depreciation the net commission figure is $13,412,026.

A strenuous fight is certain to center around this question. Preliminary skirmishes already have occurred in the course of the testimony of August C. Klein, chief mechanical engineer of Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation. Mr. Klein was employed by the company to direct inventory of its physical property and estimate what it would cost to reproduce it new as of June 30, 1932.

Mr. Klein is to resume the witness chair at 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Judge Clashes With Dimitroff

Defendant in Reichstag Fire Trial Rebuked for Jail Jest.

Berlin, Nov. 11 (AP).—Papers which Commissary Braschwitz, of the criminal police, said indicated that Georgi Dimitroff occupied a high position in the Communist International played an important part today in the trial of Dimitroff and four others on charges of firing the Reichstag Building last February.

Dimitroff, one of three Bulgarian defendants, pressed the question of whether Nazi functionaries had access to these documents, which were found on his person. Braschwitz denied on oath that Nazis had seen the papers.

Three attendants in the Parliament Building testified they recognized two of the defendants, Dimitroff, and another Bulgarian, Blagoi Popoff, before today in the Reichstag Building.

This testimony brought a heated denial from the impulsive Dimitroff. He said he had not been in the building since 1921 and, furthermore, that he did not look the same as he did because he had lost 20 pounds "through the slenderizing cure in jail."

He was angrily rebuked for this remark by presiding Judge Wilhelm Buenger.

Sends Message From Bed on Armistice Day.

San Diego, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP). Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, prima donna, today was unable for the first time to participate actively in celebration of Armistice Day.

From her hospital bed, however, she sent the following message:

"Sick as I am, my whole heart and love go out more than ever to my soldier boys. I pledge, to the end of my last breath, my love and devotion. Granting that I will get well again, I will continue to visit the hospitals and cheer my boys with my voice and presence.

"God bless my country, the United States of America, and our President."

"Best Man" Pays, Old Greek Custom

Benton Harbor, Mich., Nov. 11 (AP). Anyone wishing to take John Kanalos' place as best man at future weddings will be welcome.

John has taken the role 14 times at weddings and wants to quit. In testifying today in a divorce case, he revealed it is an old Greek custom for the best man to provide gifts for the newlyweds and refreshments for the guests.

His costs ranged from $260 to $500 per wedding and he estimated the custom has cost him between $3,500 and $4,000.

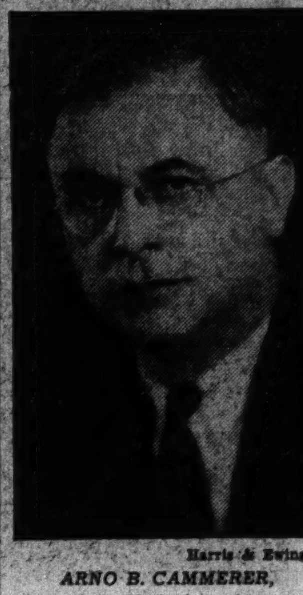
Roaches Run Ban on Fishing Remains to Save Waterfowl

Arno B. Cammerer, who runs the Nation's parks, buildings and reservations, has "ducked" the question whether Mount Vernon Memorial Highway shall be a refuge for wild fowl of the goal of fishermen.

Which is one way of saying he did not evade the issue, but has decided in favor of wild bird life by continuing the ban on angling at Roaches Run. His replies to critics of the policy were disclosed yesterday. The prohibition will last at least one more year, while experts study the habits and populations of ducks, herons and cranes, and the effects of fishing restrictions upon their migration.

Frank T. Bell, commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries, who denied anglers frighten away the birds, was out of the city when Mr. Cammerer's decision arrived. Inclosed was a copy of a letter sent to C. T. Ellis, Washington attorney, explaining why the restrictions were being continued.

The birds make a picturesque sight for the thousands of motorists who use the boulevard, said the parks chief, and the establishment of a refuge for them is of "great moment." They are undisturbed by moving autos, but take flight when approached by persons on foot or in a boat. So fishing is "out."



Harris & Ewing.

ARNO B. CAMMERER, chief of the Nation's park system, who has continued the ban on fishing in Roaches Run to protect wild waterfowl.

Mr. Cammerer added, however, that the ban will be lifted if a year's research warrants.

Best to Face Swindle Trial

Alleged "Confidence Man," Held in Ohio, Waives Extradition.

Albert Best, termed by officials "one of the smartest confidence men in the East and Middle West," will be returned to Washington this week to face trial on two charges of obtaining travelers' checks, valued at $1,600, on a pair of forged cashiers' checks on a New York bank.

Arraigned in Federal Building, at Cleveland, yesterday, after his arrest Thursday by Akron, Ohio, police on a circular issued by police here, Best waived extradition. He was taken to Cleveland after he had been seized in his Akron hotel. With him were his wife, a chauffeur and a maid.

Mrs. Best is sick in a Cleveland hospital, police heard.

Posing as Albert Fortune, Best operated behind the mask of a good neighborhood and good companions here it is charged. He is said to be wanted for swindles in several European capitals.

Watrous Tied For Second With Wood

Diminutive N. Y. Pro Takes Lead Aided by Recovery Shots.

Armour and Kirkwood in Fourth-Place Tie With 72 Cards.

WITH a remarkable display of recovery shots and the aid of his trusty putter, Paul Runyan, diminutive shot-maker from the Metropolis Club, White Plains, N. Y., pounded his way over the Kenwood course yesterday for an even par 70 to assume a 1-stroke lead at the end of 18 holes of the $2,000 National Capital Open Golf championship.

Golfdom's "little poison," as Runyan is familiarly known, lived up to his reputation as a dangerous money player, shooting a brace of 35s to top his closest pursuers, Craig Wood, potent Deal, N. J., pro, and Al Watrous, veteran Birmingham, Mich., golfer, in the hottest opening-day battle in all the three years of the competition.

Bunkered on numerous holes, Runyan exploded and chipped his way out of trouble in masterful fashion to lead a crack field of more than 175 golfers assembled here from some 32 States in the Union.

Wood Shoots 33.

It remained for the long-driving Wood, leading money winner of the 1932-33 campaign, to furnish the high explosives on the stretch. After soaring to a 38 on the first nine, Wood burned up the incoming side in 33 shots, firing birdies on the tenth, twelfth, fifteenth and seventeenth—the lowest second nine of the day. Wood canned two spectacular 20-footers on the last two holes that had the gallery gasping. Watrous shot the first nine in 34, and a weakly played second that dropped short of the eighteenth green, cost him a tie with Runyan.

Encamped in fourth place were two veterans, Tommy Armour, former British, American and Canadian open champion; Joe Kirkwood, trick shot expert, and a comparatively unknown golfer, Gene Kunes, pro at Hartford, Conn. Each posted 36—36—72. Armour came to grief on the eighteenth, which he three putted for a 5.

Six other pros, including the 1931 National open champion, Billy Burke, were tied with scores of 73, each. After using up 39 strokes on the first nine, Burke roared home with a subpar 34.

Guldahl Makes Comeback.

Guldahl shot a 39 for the first 9, and clipped 2 strokes off par on the stretch with a 34. His score, however, was held up until way after dark because of a contested penalty stroke on the second hole. The Texan had an unplayable lie after hitting his ball out of bounds, and a 2-stroke penalty was incurred after a ruling by club officials. Guldahl thus was given a 7, instead of a 6 on the hole.

Others who scored 73's were Johnny Revolta, Menominee, Mich.; Frank Walsh, Chicago; Willie Klein, Wheatley, N. Y., and Al Houghton, the host pro.

Will MacFarlane, Tuckahoe, N. Y., 1925 open king and 1931 national open champion, was bracketed with three others at 74. Bob Cruikshank, Richmond, Va., shot a 34 on the stretch to finish with 74, while Len 35,000 See Bears Take Command at Very Start.

Memorial Stadium, Berkeley, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP).—Out of the depths of earlier disappointments rose a mighty California Golden Bear eleven today to batter the University of Washington Huskies to a 33-0 defeat.

About 35,000 fans watched the most convincing rout of a Washington team by California since the Bears piled up a 45-7 victory in 1922.

From the time they blocked a kick and recovered the ball behind the husky goal line for the first touchdown the Bears were in complete command of the game.

ABEMUDDLED and befuddled University of Maryland team and a frost-bitten crowd of 6,500 spectators watched a powerhouse Duke University eleven score six touchdowns at College Park yesterday afternoon, to win out, 38 to 7. But the thrill of the chilly afternoon was not the half-dozen 6-point scores that dented the Terp goal line, but Dick Nelson's 25-yard pass to Willie Benner, who galloped 50 yards for Maryland's first, last and only touchdown of the game. Bucky Buscher coolly booted the try for extra point.

The Terp touchdown was scored against the Dukes' first team. Wallace Wade started the game with 11 second-stringer Dukes, and it was this team that sewed up the ball game for the Durham drivers and ran their string to eight straight wins and a closer step to a possible Rose Bowl bid.

Terps Show Fight.

However, it was a fighting Terp team, that failed to give an inch without an argument. The breaks were against the Byrdmen in the first half, especially when a sure touchdown on the Duke 6, with three downs to go, was changed into a fumbled lateral which was retrieved by the Blue Devils.

In a dying gesture of the first half the Maryland team power-housed and air-heaved its way to the Duke 2-yard line, but the toot of the referee's whistle stopped a possible score. The Old Liners had two downs to carry the ball across when the fateful blast sounded. It was a death knell for further Maryland scoring.

Duke Scores Early.

Maryland kicked off to Duke to start the game. Jack Alexander scored after a drive down the field netting three first downs, starting from the Duke's 45, with Ward, Alexander and Lanay alternating, carrying the ball. Alexander missed the try for point.

Halfway through the first period, after an exchange of kicks, Alexander began lugging the ball down the field. At the 50, Laney uncorked a pass to Alexander on the PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 11 (AP). Pretty well baffled most of a cold afternoon by a fighting Dartmouth defense, Princeton's sizzling sophomores managed to get in one good lick right where it did the most good today and emerge with a 7-to-0 triumph over the Indians from New Hampshire.

It was getting along toward the close of the third quarter before Fritz Crisler's wonder boys, who, perhaps, had anticipated a pleasant outing before 40,000 spectators, pierced their opponents' armor. And then they had to be helped along with a 15-yard penalty.

All in all, the sons of Nassau were fairly fortunate to preserve their record of not having been beaten, tied or scored upon in six engagements this autumn. Dartmouth, blanked for the first time, tried for one field goal from the 23-yard line, and on several other occasions worked their way far into the Tiger country.

Ken Fairman, brilliant Princeton end, from Syracuse, scored the game's lone touchdown when he caught John Kadlic's 20-yard pass almost on Dartmouth's goal line, right in the corner of the field and stepped across. A 15-yard penalty plastered on Dartmouth for roughing the scampering little Garry Le Van, had placed the Tigers in scoring position. Frank John, Princeton guard, placekicked the extra point.

For the most part Princeton's galaxy of ball carirers, who have been running all over people in recent weeks, found themselves thrown back by the 195-pound Dartmouth forward wall. There were times, like in the opening minutes of the game, when Le Van and Constable tore off a few sizable gains, but they could never keep it up. Glazer and Erion, Dartmouth's two big tackles, broke through many times

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 11 (AP). Stanford's fighting football team outplayed and outscored Southern California before a crowd of 90,000 persons today, to win, 13-to-7, and administer the first defeat the Trojans have suffered in 18 games.

Not since September, 1931, when St. Mary's won by the same score as that of today, had Southern California suffered a reverse, although the record was spotted by one scorless tie with Oregon State this season.

The Big Red team form Palo Alto cashed in on two field goals from sure-footed Bill Corbus in the last four minutes of play to climax a drive by the Indians starting just after the home guard took a first period lead through the medium of a 43-yard touchdown gallop by "Cotton" Warburton.

Great On Defense.

Corbus not only used his right foot to good advantage, but did a world of damage with his hands, playing a sensational defensive game against the hard charging Trojans.

There was little doubt in the minds of the great Armistice Day crowd as to the result when Corbus kicked his first field goal, after he missed two. There was then only four minutes left to play. When he kicked the second three there was just one minute left for the Trojans to do something about their record and they could not do it.

Stanford was the better team the last three periods.

There was not much to choose between the teams on first downs,

Oregon Beats State; Leads in Coast Race

Multnomah Stadium, Portland, Oreg., Nov., 11 (AP).—Oregon State's famous "iron men" football machine was melted to scrap today by a fiery University of Oregon team which swept to a 13-to-3 victory to take an unchallenged position at the head of the Pacific Coast Conference.

The "Iron Immortals" of Corvallis, who had previously played through three battles with only two substitutions, and who had held the mighty Trojans to a scoreless tie with only 11 men, wilted under the relentless onslaught of the Webfooters and all were replaced in the fourth quarter.

HARVARD STADIUM, Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 11 (U.P.). An Army team led by Cadet Jack Butler celebrated Armistice Day by handing Harvard its most severe defeat of the season, 27 to 0, before a holiday crowd of 50,000.

Playing less than three full periods, the 159-pound half back scored two of West Point's four touchdowns and booted all three of his team's extra points. He was the spark plug of a slow starting offensive which developed full fury before the afternoon was over.

Stancook and Sebastian starred with Buckler and Simon in the Cadet back field. Litman, substitute left half back, was outstanding for Havard.

Reaches 18-yard Line.

Rated a decided underdog in the betting, Harvard offered a surprising offensive in the first period, keeping the play deep in Army territory and once penetrating to the 18-yard line.

A factor in Harvard's defense was the punting of Captain Dean and Haley. Twice they booted the ball outside on the two yard Army line.

Statistics gave Army an edge in every department. The Cadets made 12 first downs to Harvard's seven. They gained 219 yards by rushing to Harvard's 107. Army completed 4 of 10 forward passes attempted for a total gain of 81 yards. Harvard completed 5 in 13 attempts for 62 yards.

Buckler's toe had an off day, his punts averaging only 35 yards. Harvard also was weak in this department, with a 33-yard average.

Stancook Makes First.

Stancook's interception of Dean's pass in the second period started Army's 62 yard march to its first touchdown. A pass, Sebastian to Johnson, was good for 32 yards. Buckler then passed to Stancook near his own left end and Stancook ran 20 yards for the touchdown, Buckler place-kicking the extra point.

A 47-yard march, during which Buckler completed one pass and carried in five line plays, ended in another touchdown, Buckler scoring it and booting the extra point.

Play seesawed in midfield for the rest of that period, but in the third, Army launched a running attack after Beall had recovered Barrett's fumble on Harvard's 42-yard line. Buckler and Stancook made three

Michigan State Plays Carnegie to 0-0 Tie

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 11 (U.P.). Carnegie Tech and Michigan State battled to a 0-to-0 tie before 8,000 today in a tightly played game.

Although both teams made serious threats at scoring neither was able to cross the others goal. After opening rushes failed following the kick-offs, the game worked into a kicking duel between Armstrong of Michigan, and Miriam, Carnegie full back.

McCrary attempted a placement kick on the fourth quarter for Michigan State, but the ball was wide of the mark.

Georgia Takes 4th Straight Over Yale

Wins, 7-0, Before 35,000; Scores in 1st Period of Hard Struggle.

YALE BOWL, New Haven, Conn., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Georgia's undefeated and untied football team made it four in a row over Yale in the bowl today, winning, 7 to 0, before about 35,000 spectators.

The Southerners, who were expected to smother the boys in blue by half a dozen touchdowns, ran into unforeseen opposition and were completely outplayed in the second half by a team that suddenly found itself.

Four times in this second half, Yale, blocking and tackling with a precisioned ferocity, drove deep into Georgia territory, only to have its attack bog down when the promised land was in sight.

In the first two periods Georgia, depsite the fact that it scored but one touchdown, lived up to its reputation. Led by a little swivel-hipped half back named Home: Key, the Southerners gained 217 yards by rushing, to Yale's 45; made nine first downs to Yale's one. Key alone picked up 114 yards on four brilliant runs, the longest of which was 40 yards.

Early Georgia Score.

Georgia's touchdown came 10 minutes after the opening kick-off when Full Back Chapman slammed the middle of the Yale line for 2

Reds Barry Beats Veteran Maloney

Washington Boy Outpoints Foe at Asheville.

Asheville, N. C., Nov. 11 (Spl.). The veteran Jim Maloney's attempted comeback was spoiled for the time being here tonight, when Donald "Reds" Barry, of Washington, D. C., clearly outpointed the Boston fighter to register a decision in 10 rounds before 3,000 fans at the Carolina Arena.

After a couple of slow sessions, the Washington youth, handling his 202 pounds with the speed of a lightweight, opened up with a barrage of lefts and rights, and although they did little damage, it was enough to tally points, and when the battle ended, the redhead was far out in front.

Handicapped by about 15 pounds of excess weight, much of it about the waistline, Maloney looked good from the hips up, but he couldn't get his legs to act as if he had them. As a result, the speedier Barry darted in and out, always on the lookout for Maloney's murderous right hand, and scored cleanly with both hands time and again.

Maloney, after the second round, chose to do his fighting inside, and forced his foe into clinches at every opportunity.

By Westbrook Pegler.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—Some one must have been feeding meat to the Lions of Columbia University since that recent afternoon when they played an insipid game against the sprightly sophomore of Princeton to lose, 20 to 0. Columbia gave the Midshipmen of the U. S. Naval Academy an emphatic licking this afternoon and reduced to a disorganized and futile condition the young men whose prestige and ambitions suddenly leaped high when they beat Notre Dame in Baltimore a week ago.

All three kicks after the touchdowns were good and Columbia won, 14 to 7, but the mournful numbers of the more intimate statistics of the game show more truly the difference between the teams. Columbia made 15 first downs to three for the Navy in a couple of hours of fierce fighting up and down a doggy spread of turf, and gained 222 yards rushing to 78 for the Navy.

Navy Displays Confusion.

Both football teams had reversed themselves. Columbia had come along amazingly and handled the ball most of the time with the subtle dexterity of Andy Kerr's Colgate magicians of 1932 in a repertoire of fancy passes which left the Navy youths flatfooted, openmouthed and confused. The Navy, on the other hand, whose line had fought so fiercely to stop the big, rumbling Notre Dame rushes whenever real danger threatened at Baltimore, was much more innocent today, seeming to have not the foggiest notion of what it was all about much of the time.

Columbia scored first in the opening period not long after the kick-off with a swift progress of 80 yards, in the course of which Cliff Montgomery, the Columbia captain, returned a punt 10 yards, tossed two passes for gains of 20 and 10 yards, and finally carried the ball across, in person, from the 3-yard line. He was given perfect protection and cooperation in these and most other actions of the game by a heavy duty back named Bill Nevel, who will not be heard of much because, in football, fame favors the obvious and neglects many worthy toilers whose achievements need a little looking for.

Fumbles, Recovers.

In the sequence which led to this first touchdown, Montgomery got Bill Clark's punt at his 20-yard line and returned to the 30 before he was overpowered. He then slid off tackle for 7 and called on Ed Brominski, who fumbled, recovered and still found the Navy's defense so well herded off that he was able to stamp through for 8 yards and a first down. Montgomery's first pitch went to Ownie McDowell, an end, for a 20-yard gain and a first down on Navy's 33-yard line, which is about the point where the hard resistance set in on half a dozen occasions in the Navy-Notre Dame game a week ago.

REBUFFED in the ground warfare, the University of Detroit struck with blinding fury through the air yesterday, found Catholic U. woefully vulnerable, and inflicted the wounds of a 26-0 defeat on the Cardinals' proud home record that been unmarred by adversity since the campaign of 1930.

Adversity came home to roost with the C. U. home-coming crowd of 5,000 at Griffith Stadium who sat in on the defenselessness of a Cardinal eleven against a polished aerial attack that saw Titan receivers seemingly sprouting from the cocoa-brown gridiron to take unto themselves a flood of passes launched by hands that were gifted.

Detroit passes, most of them hurled by its burly half back, Doug Nott, acclaimed the equal of Harry Newman, whistled through the air like shrapnel, tearing down the C. U. that had been especially prepared for such an offensive. The visitors completed nine out of 22 passes for gains totaling 174 yards.

Card's Gains are Futile.

Catholic was best on the ground. Using Notre Dame formations the Cards rifled through Detroit's bulky forward wall for consistent gains, but they couldn't keep the ball rolling when the goal line hove in view. They simply over did this business of imitating Notre Dame, and went so far as to even leave out their scoring punch.

A pass from Nott to McCracken brought the ball out from Detroit's 24-yard line to the 45-yard mark following an exchange of kicks in the first period. The teams sparred momentarily at midfield before C. U. was assessed 15 precious yards for mauling the passer. Nott then faded back and pegged the leather to Capt. Cliff Marsh, who staggered over the goal line with Augusterfer clamping a finger-hold on his cleats.

Catholic rallied, and Charley McVean, who replaced Augusterfer at quarter back, whipped the team down to Detroit's 30-yard line before the Titans awoke to the realization of the danger that threatened and batted down two consecutive passes and gained possession of the oval.

Lutz Gets First Down.

Nott made a yard at center before Dick Lutz carried the ball and three C. U. players off tackle for a first down on the 48-yard line. Detroit marked time, sending a man into the line for no gain, before Marsh called for another of Nott's passes. Nott dropped back, faked a kick, and as a quartet of Cardinals rushed in to block it, turned and found a waiting target in Lutz, some 30 yards downfield, with a lazy heave. Lutz stepped aside as two C. U. men

Pomposity Runs Greatest Race of Career to Win $5,000 Riggs Handicap at Pimlico

Mate Is Out Of Money In Stake

Coe Star Is Winner by Neck Margin Over Mad Frump.

Closes With Rush to Near Track Record Before 15,000.

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, Nov. 11 (AP).—W. R. Coe's Pomposity, 3-year-old son of Pompey, which came back from Kentucky with the Latonia Championship Stakes to his credit, ran the greatest race of his career here today to win the Riggs Handicap, gruelling 1 and 3-16 miles feature of the getaway day program. Running the distance in 1:59, one second off the track record, the bay colt drove home a long neck before C. V. Whitney's Mad Frump. Lee Rosenberg's Kerry Patch was third, two lengths away. Mate, the favorite, was a close fourth.

Old Hilltop played host to a banner crowd, estimated at more than 15,000, these turf fans braving wintry weather to see a splendid program. Those who wagered on the Coe entry, Pomposity and Osculator, recent conqueror of Equipoise, received $11.60 for $2. The winner earned $4,700 for his owner. It was another feather in the cap of Trainer J. H. Stotler, who leaves W. R. Coe at the end of this season.

Mad Frump Shines.

The three "money horses" all came from far out of it. Mad Frump's was the most spectacular, the colt passing all but the winner from last place on the back stretch.

Osculator played his part perfectly. He set a dizzy pace to the far turn, killing the chances of his closest pursuers—Barn Swallow, Mate, War Glory and Good Advice—as it developed later. Mate was in close quarters on the far side, but he tired when the real issue came.

When Osculator faded, War Glory assumed a daylight advantage entering the strech. Lee Humphries got Pomposity to running on the outside. The latest star of the 3-year-olds passed horses rapidly and finally nabbed the staggering War Glory in the last furlong. But Mad Frump, going fastest of all on the extreme outside, was coming out of the clouds. He was wearing Pomposity down fast in the closing strides, but Earl Porter could not get him up in time, despite furious efforts by horse and rider. Kerry Patch ran over the other tiring horses and just got up to beat Mate.

Seven jumpers competed in the initial event, but only three finished. Luckite, paying $6.80, got home two lengths clear. Red Bridge and Cahirciveen, the latter favorite, followed the winner to the wire a nose apart. Lavisby and Indicator fell, Axon lost rider and The Awakening ran out of the course, but apparently no riders were more than shaken up. Indicator and Cahirciveen led the pack until Luckite joined them the second time around. Mr. C. R. White rode out the gelding after the last jump.

Prize Package justified her odds of $4.80 for $2 when she easily defeated 11 other juveniles in the second event. Doeskin was her chief contender all the way, but the favorite passed her rival in the first 3 furlongs and never was measured thereafter, although trying to bear out in the final furlong.

Okapi Strikes Stride.

Mrs. Dodge Sloane's Okapi finally struck his winning stride in the Southern, a 6-furlong handicap for all ages. The Eternal colt ran over the early leaders to score by 2 lengths in the fast time of 1:11 4-5. De Valera beat Black Hand by a length and a half for the place. Character, heavily backed, stopped after showing a flash of early foot. De Valera led the field a merry clip until Okapi, challenging through the stretch, collared that colt and drew well clear. Okapi returned $8.20.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LUCKITE, $6.80, $3.40, $2.40; RED BRIDGE, $3.80, $2.80; CAHIRCIVEEN, $2.60.

LUCKITE, full of run from the beginning, assumed command after shaking off CAHIRCIVEEN at the tenth fence and, strongly ridden thereafter, just had enough left to withstand RED BRIDGE. Latter, restrained close to the leaders, came willingly under stout pressure at the end. CAHIRCIVEEN raced INDICATOR into submission, but could not maintain slight lead held between calls. INDICATOR fell at the twelfth fence and AXON lost rider at the same jump. THE AWAKENING ran out of the course going to the fourth fence while LAVISBY lost rider at the third jump.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good for all but Reigh Rose. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 1:57. Off at 1:59. Winner, Miss Mary Hirsch's ch. f. (2), by Upset—Polanegri. Trained by M. Hirsch. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:48, 1:13 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PRIZE PACKAGE, $4.80, $3.20, $2.60; DOESKIN, $6.00, $4.40; THE BAILIFF, $5.00.

PRIZE PACKAGE, hurried after the start, reached a forward position after the opening furlong, saved ground to take command at the stretch turn and came away nearing the finish. DOESKIN, rated in front, weakened during the final drive. THE BAILIFF raced forwardly and came again to outstay HAPPY SUE. Latter went prominently, but bore out in the closing furlong. INFILEE closed gamely after being slow to get into stride. KNIGHT'S HOPE weakened steadily. GOLDEN CAMP raced very green the entire trip. BABY CHINK had speed in the opening furlong.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. For all ages. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:23. Off at 2:26. Winner, Brookmeade Stable's br. c. (3), by Eternal—Oktibbena. Two-dollar mutuels paid—OKAPI, $8.20, $5.60, $4.80; DE VALERA, $4.60, $3.40; BLACK HAND, $6.00.

OKAPI, kept close to the leaders and on the inside early, came to the outside when moving up strongly, wore down DE VALERA and was going away under stiff urging. DE VALERA, strongly handled, could not withstand the winner. BLACK HAND, squeezed back leaving the back stretch, slipped through on the inside entering the home stretch and finished gamely. FLAGSTONE, crowded back soon after the start, closed stoutly when clear. CHARACTER forced a fast early pace. He tired. POMPEIUS and FORTUNATE YOUTH were outrun.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; allowances. For 2-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 2:49. Off at 2:51½. Winner, Argosy Stable's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BONGO, $31.40, $11.80, $8.40; HOLYSTONE, $3.80, $3.40; PRECURSOR, $6.80.

BONGO, sent into contention when reaching the back stretch, took command without effort midway of back stretch and held sway thereafter and held HOLYSTONE safe. Latter, sluggish going to the first turn, was rushed into a forward position and then closed gamely under punishment. PRECUSOR, shuffled back entering the back stretch, went to the outside and closed willingly. WILCO, a slow beginner, came courageously in the late stages. REBEL YELL went wide all the way. CANT REMEMBER and BE SHY tired after forcing the pace.

FIFTH RACE—One and three-sixteenth miles. Purse, $5,000 added. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:20½. Off at 3:25. Winner, W. R. Two-dollar mutuels paid—POMPOSITY, $11.60, $6.00, $5.00; MAD FRUMP, $6.20, $4.80; GERRY PATCH, $9.80.

POMPOSITY, slow to settle in his stride, worked his way up on the outside to the leaders with a rush and, holding on willingly when in command, lasted to stall off MAD FRUMP. Latter, a trailer for the first seven furlongs, circled his field and closed with a belated rush. KERRY PATCH improved his position stoutly and finished strongly. MATE, in the thick of contention from the start, could not better his position when strongly handled. THURSDAY, crowded at the first turn, went up on the inside to reach contention and showed a good effort. WAR GLORY was tiptoed all the way. OSCULATOR tired, as did GOOD ADVICE. BARN SWALLOW stopped and was eased up.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:55. Off at 3:56. Winner, E. R. Bradley's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BARTERING KATE, $28.40, $9.60, $6.00; PATCH POCKET, $5.80, $4.00; ROSE PARADE, $5.80.

BARTERING KATE outran her field to the first turn, shook off repeated efforts from BIFF and finished with speed in reserve. PATCH POCKET gained steadily when put to a drive, but could not menace the winner. ROSE PARADE, slower than usual in the early stages, circled his field and finished stoutly. CLOUDET broke from the outside and closed gamely. PLIGHT went forwardly and had no mishaps. TRIANGULAR was unable to reach contention. BIFF stopped when called on.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:20. Off at 4:21½. Winner, M. L. Schwartz's br. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CLARIFY, $17.20, $7.00, $5.20; DEDUCE, $3.60, $2.80; RESERVIST, $5.80.

CLARIFY, allowed to settle in her best stride when trailing her field, moved up with a rush when shaken up, swung to the outside to wear the leaders down and was slowly moving clear at the end. DEDUCE, reserved off the pace, reached the leaders, but could not withstand the winner. RESERVIST, close up from the start, weakened after taking command. DYAK, stoutly restrained for six furlongs, was in tight quarters during the final drive. GARDEN MESSAGE, placed to punishment and rushed hard in the first five furlongs, stopped badly thereafter. EURYALUS was done after six furlongs.

EIGHTH RACE—One and three-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:48. Off at 4:50. Winner, N. E. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SURETY, $16.00, $7.20, $3.40; TELA, $4.80, $3.00; EVEN UP, $2.60.

SURETY, going in his best form, was steadied in front until the final half mile, saved ground after being displaced and, coming again, outlasted TELA. Latter, a strong factor from the start, went into a slight lead in the closing furlong, but bore out approaching the finish. EVEN UP worked his way up gradually and closed stoutly. MOMO was bothered when BUCK AND WING stopped in front of her. She closed fast when steered wide thereafter. AFLOAT raced well.

Milling, Burl Expert Club Fighters

Lively Scrap Likely Next Tuesday in Portner's Main Attraction.

VARIAS MILLING, who indulges in various milling with Eddie Burl over the 10-round route at Portner's Tuesday, is one of the best featherweight club fighters to come out of the West. Eddie Burl is one of the best featherweight club fighters spawned in the East. So, in this instance, when East meets West, clubs undoubtedly will be trumps.

If past performances are any criterion, both East and West should be leading with lefts, rights and chins in a noble effort to pile up a grand slam and annex all honors. In a contest of this sort, sometimes the cards fall wrong, but if the action is brisk and reckless enough everyone is usually satisfied but the loser. Milling being more or less an unknown quantity here, it is not known just how strong the bidding will be for seats to the melee, but it is generally thought that the sanguine army of local fight fans will turn out in fairly large numbers.

Good Performances.

Milling's grand-slamming career has found him turning in some startlingly good performances, such as the one in which he knocked Earl Maestro kicking in nine rounds and the rip-snorting draw that he battled out with Tommy Paul. The Filipino sock exchanger also fought two very good bouts with Fidel La Barba, which he lost by the narrowest of margins.

Burl needs very little, if any, introduction to local fans, most of whom recall the imbroglio with Jimmy Mack, in which he made his debut here by hammering the classy Philadelphia featherweight to a draw. Since then he has turned in many fights hereabouts, some good, some bad and some indifferent—but all interesting.

Knowles Gets Chance.

"Chief" Perry Knowles, Goldie Ahearn's featherweight, gets the big chance for which he has been crying in the eight-round semifinal, which finds him stacked up against Mickey Genaro.

Three fours will round out the card. Ernie Caesar meets Soldier Clarke in the most promising looking of these preliminaries; Harry Slaughter engages Tom Wright and Joe Green battles Ralph De Pelt in others.

Man Mountain Matman to Show Here

Deam, 301-Pound Georgia Hill-Billy, to Rassle Komar Thursday.

IF the Washington Auditorium rassle mat is rocked from stem to stern Thursday night, don't be surprised. In one of the 30 minute special attractions on Matchmaker Joe Turner's new deal mat parade Frank (Man Mountain) Dean, 301-pound hill billy sensation from Georgia's mountain region, will be stacked against a mere wisp of an opponent, 260-pound Joe (Bull) Komar.

Aggregating 561 pounds and possessed of sufficient heft to warrant Turner's having the ring reenforced, those human pachyderms will offer the novelty feature of one of the most colorful collections of growlers ever presented on any one card.

Considered a great box-office attraction, the bewhiskered and primitive Dean is considered one of the mat's bugaboos. Cashing in on man power alone, the Man Mountain, under the direction of his wife (Doris Dean), has terrorized the general run of musclemen.

Szabo-E. Dusek Feature.

Headlining Thursday night's all-star show will be popular Sandor Szabo, the classically built Hungarian, and Ernie Dusek.

Szabo boasted a huge following here several years back, his grace and smooth style proving particularly captivating to Turner fair fans.

The semifinal finds Jumping Joe Savoldi, former Notre Dame footballer and winner of a disputed match with Jimmy Londos last spring, matched with personable, 6-foot 7 inch Roland Kirchmeyer.

Although his famed "drop-kick," a throwback to football days, has been barred in New York, Savoldi will be permitted to utilize it to the fullest extent here.

Two more 30-minute bouts are in the making.

Around the Ring...

LAST Tuesday this column formed a minute portion of a motley assortment of checkervested, unshaven sports writers and high-browed, pince-nezed critics that previewed one of fildom's epic opuses, titled "The Prizefighter and the Lady."

The criticizers of the drama were there because it was one of filmdom's epic opuses and it is their job to be present at previews of each and every one of the 200-odd epic opuses unreeled each year. The sports writers were there because the epic opus marked the screen debut of the prize ring's gift to the fillums and lonesome wimmen—Max Baer—and because sportswriters don't often get a chance to see a movie free without swapping three seats on the 50-yard line for the Army-Navy game.

Better Job of Casting.

This column emerged into the sunlight after watching Mr. Baer, Mr. Dempsey, Mr. Carnera et al. emote upon the screen, firmly convinced that although the "Prizefighter and the Lady" was indeed an epic opus, we could do a better job of casting. The one big trouble with "The Prizefighter and the Lady" is that scattered about here and there in the cast are real, honest-to-goodness actor fellows, trying to act like prizefight fellows. Our cast would be strictly prizefight. No actor would clutter up our scenario.

Mulling the matter, we have decided definitely upon a better cast, as follows:

Primo Carnera ... Marty Gallagher
Bill Duffy .... Harry Grove
Leon See .... Benny Ladis
Steve (the passionate pug, portrayed by Max Baer
in the original version) .... "Reds" Barry
Jack Dempsey ..... Patsy Donovan
The Lady .... Wo don't know any

The advantages, the plasticity of our cast over that in the filmed version are obvious.

Brick-Top Thatch.

Of course, many will question the casting of Donald "Reds" Barry as the hero, but a little careful consideration makes it plain that the Southeast red-head is potentially a more effective Romeo than Max Baer. In the first place, hair for hair, his brick-top should be more than a match for the kinky thatch that surmounts the Livermore Larruper in awakening suppressed desires in the hearts of lady-like spinsters. Queen Elizabeth, Clara Bow and perhaps Cleopatra were titian-topped and they did all right in an amorous sort of way. If red hair's good enough for them, it should be be good enough for our hero.

It will probably be pointed out that Barry lacks the broad shoulders that Baer displays so effectively on the screen. That is true, but our hero boasts a very wide pair of calves that will undoubtedly prove most effective in close-ups. And one great advantage our leading man will have over Baer. Baer had to be taught to pull his punches for studio purposes, but Barry's slapping blows should be ideally suited to cinematic ring warfare.

All in all, our cast should sparkle, but we are afraid that somewhere there is basis for a libel suit. So far as we can tell now, it would probably come from Leon See.

Ross' Appearance Talked.

There has been some talk of lightweight champion Barney Ross appearing in our local rings, if this and if that. The most authentic authorities anent the champion feel that he could not be induced to appear here against Wesley Ramey. In fact, he has displayed little inclination to appear anywhere against Wesley Ramey.

Hunts Feature Is Won by Gigolo

Maniator Second at Middleburg; Sun Wrack Lands Homeland.

MIDDLEBURG, Va., Nov. 11 (AP).—Gigolo, the brown son of Hatter, was the winner in the tight three-horse race for the R Penn Smith, jr., Challenge Plate—the feature of the card in the Middleburg fall hunt here today.

Owned by Mrs. Vadim Makaroff, of Oyster Bay, Long Island, and with William Street up, Gigolo came home ahead of Robert B. Young's Maniator, owner up, second, and B. O. Randolph's Lipan Lad, third.

Only 3 horses accepted the issue from a field of 10 which had been nominated.

Gigolo, showing the gameness that is noteworthy in the line of stayers founded by the great Fair Play, broke on top, led over the first fence, and withstood, in gallant fashion, the challenge of Maniator during the last mile. Gigolo won with daylight between him and the pounding Maniator, turning the 3½ miles in 7:57 2-5.

Homeland to Sun Wrack.

The Homeland, 2½ miles over brush, in which a field of five faced the flag, was won by a hoof-beat by Sun Wrack, owned by Stephen Clark, jr., of New York, with B. Cocks up. Sun Wrack, driving furiously through the final stages of the journey, collared Our Friend, the pacemaker, as the field turned for home, and gained the decision in a whipping stirring finish. Both horses were ridden out. Boel Laing had the Leg on Our Friend. Alvin Untermeyer's Drapeau, second to Annapolis in the Master of Fox Hounds Steeplechase at Pimlico Thursday, was third. The time was 4:41 2-5.

John Brown, racing in the colors of W. B. Rutharuff, of Redbank, N. J., with Balding up, won the Belray, 3 miles over timber, whittling down the early lead set by Check Mate, and beating out Untermeyer's H. J. Smith by a ½ mile. Check Mate lasted to finish third. The time was 545 4-5.

The Barleigh Amateur High-Weight Handicap: 1¾ miles, on the flat—First Speculation, owned by Joseph M. Roebling, first; Starwink, owned by H. Germaine, second; Boundless Deep, owned by Mrs. John Hay Whitney, third. Corn Dodger, Dress Parade, Infuriator, Frances Cooper, Red Russia, War Eagle, Consumer, Silver Bar, Aughrim Boy and Palm Off also ran. Time, 2:37 3-5.

The R. Penn Smith Challenge Plate: 3½ miles, over timber—Gigolo, owned by Mrs. Vadim Makaroff, first; Miniator, owned by R. B. Young, second; Lipan Lad, owned by B. O. F. Randolph, third. Only three entries. Time, 6:37 2-5.

The Belray: 3 miles, over timber; for maidens and winners of one timber race—John Brown, owned by W. B. Ruthrauff, first; H. J. Smith, owned by Alvin Untermeyer, second; Check Mate, owned by Morrell Clarkson, third. Golden Rod, Sea Rover, Lasting, Straide and Red Eagle also ran. Time, 5:45 4-5.

The Dinwiddie: 2 miles, over brush; claiming race; for 4-year-olds and upward—Last Tag, owned by Mrs. John Hay Whitney, first; Lorenzo, owned by Earl S. Potter, second; Brandon Brander, owned by Thomas B. Gay, third. Fourbloom, Charioteer, Lena's King and Silver Pay also ran. Time, 4:05.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 11 (AP). Herman Everhardus, the flying Dutchman from Kalamazoo, unleashed a toe as true as a Navy siege gun and Bill Renner displayed uncanny passing aim today as Michigan's powerful football team, playing in snow and ice, swept toward a fourth consecutive Big Ten championship with a hard-earned 10-6 victory over Iowa.

The fighting team from the Tall Corn State harvested a well-deserved touchdown early in the third period on a pass from George Teyro, sub Iowa back, that Bernard Page, shifty end, took on Michigan's 13-yard line. Capt. Stan Fay, of Michigan, tackled Page as the pass dropped in his arms, but the elusive Hawkeye slipped from Fay's grasp and raced across the goal line. Ted Petoskey smashed through to block Russ Fisher's try for the extra point.

Boots Field Goal.

Michigan had scored its 10 points when the Hawkeye counter came. The first score came at the end of the initial period, when Evenhardus made good his second try for a field goal. He kicked from the 24-yard line, and the ball sailed true. Previously each side had failed in attempts to place-kick, Everhardus trying from the 35-yard line and Russ Fisher of Iowa from the 26.

The Michigan touchdown came early in the second period, after Renner, whose passing arm proved valuable despite the dangers of a wet field and occasional snow flurries, came into the game. Everhardus, as elusive as a banshee, wormed his way through desperate Iowa tacklers for a 47-yard run, from Iowa's 37 to the 16-yard line, where Russ Fisher downed him. Three plays later Renner found a receiver in Captain Fay, uncovered in the end zone. He hurled the ball to Fay, who went over the goal line untouched. Everhardus' placement was good.

Snow Covers Tarpaulin.

Snow covered the huge tarpaulin over the playing field an hour before game time, and 200 men shoveled for an hour to remove the weight, before the tarpaulin could be taken off. The field was soggy, and the 26,000 spectators sat in freezing weather with overcast skies and occasional flurries of snow.

Indiana Gridmen Tie Chicago at 7-7

All Scoring of Thriller Is Done in First Period.

Stagg Field, Chicago, Nov. 11 (AP). Indiana and Chicago, hitherto a pair of the more docile teams of the Western Conference, forgot their mild manners today and hammered each other all over Stagg Field in a thrilling 7-to-7 tie. All the scoring was packed into the first period.

The battle was just nicely started when Indiana, on a sensational forward pass maneuver, went into the lead. After an exchange of kicks, Wendell Walker, the Hoosier full back, sauntered over near the east sideline and fired a 29-yard pass to Ed Antonini, his left end. Antonini caught the ball on Chicago's 18-yard mark, wrenched loose from two Maroon defenders and sped over for the touchdown. Fitzhugh Lyon, huge Negro end, place kicked for the point.

Chicago wasted little time in squaring things up. Tommy Flinn intercepted a pass by Walker and Zimmer a few moments later shot a pass to Sahlin who was downed on the Indiana 11-yard. Jay Derwanger and Ewald Nyquist made a first down on the 1-yard line and Berwanger carried it over two plays later. He added the point that tied the score via place kick.

5-Game-Losing Streak Broken by Baltimore

Baltimore, Nov. 11 (AP).—As 200 British bluejackets from the H. M. S. Norfolk watched from the stands, the University of Baltimore broke its losing streak of five scoreless games today by downing Bridgewater College from Virginia, 52 to 0.

Whitey Bender scored three touchdowns and Alperstein got two more while Baier and Hoffmeister scored once each. Bridgewater threatened at no time, but made several long gains in midfield on forward passes and the running of Paul Horst.

The Heavyweight Championship Zig-Zag Puzzle

OF COURSE THE CARNERA-PAOLINO FIGHT COULDN'T BE A FIGHT, AND EVERYBODY OUTSIDE OF ROME KNEW IT WOULDN'T BE. (LOUGHRAN, LEVINSKY, SCHAAF AND LITTLE MICKEY WALKER - ONE-HALF THE BULK OF CARNERA - HAD SOCKED PAOLINO INTO RETIREMENT IN 1932.)
BAER SAYS HE HAS CUT OUT THE HOLLYWOOD STUFF AND IS GOING BACK TO HARD TRAINING AND A LOT OF FIGHTING . . . IF HE DOES HE'LL BE HARD TO DUCK.
PRIMO'S "CHAMPIONSHIP FIGHT" FOR NEXT YEAR IS ALREADY SET WITH MAX SCHMELING, WHO WAS KNOCKED OUT BY BAER, AND WHO AS CHAMPION EVIDENTLY THOUGHT PRIMO TOO TOUGH, FOR HE "RAN OUT" OF HIS CARNERA MATCH.
I DON'T WANT TO FIGHT BAER - HE IS SUCH A NICE FELLOW!
I'LL GETCHA
CARNERA, PERSONALLY, WOULD FIGHT ANYBODY, BUT HE HAS SENTIMENTAL OBJECTIONS TO THIS ONE MATCH.
MICKEY WALKER WAS STOPPED BY MAX SCHMELING IN 8 ROUNDS, SO HE SHOULD BE PRIMO'S "LOGICAL OPPONENT" FOR THE NEXT ROMAN HOLIDAY.

Fordham Rally Overcomes N. Y. U.

Scores Two Touchdowns in Fourth Quarter for 20-12 Victory.

NEW YORK Nov. 11 (AP).—After an early fright, Fordham came from far behind to defeat their bitter intracity rivals, New York University, by a score of 20 to 12 at Yankee Stadium this afternoon.

The Rams were conceded to be heavy favorites, but the Violets started with a threatening bombardment that gave them an early lead. But Coach Crowley's shock troops came to life in the final period to put across the pair of winning touchdowns against their fast-weakening opponents.

Their two touchdowns were the first points the Violets have scored over the Rams since 1928, and the victory marked the Rams' ninth victory in their series of 15 games with New York University, beginning in 1904. N. Y. U. has won four and one was a tie.

Start Functioning.

Fordham seemed to be afflicted with an acute case of the miseries during the early part of the game, but in the final period their smooth team work and tricky back-field plays started functioning.

Danowski shot a beautiful pass to Bonetski to put the ball on the Violets' 27-yard line. The Rams then unleashed a disturbing series of double spinners and delayed end runs, with Danowski and Cowhig carrying, to go right up to the 1-yard line. Maniaci carried it across.

The Violets tried to come back Isola, huge Fordham center, got in the way of one, tucked it in through a mob of would-be tacklers for 40 yards and a third touchdown.

35-Yard Gallop.

The Rams drew first blood when Tatro recovered a fumble by his own team and pounded his way down the side line 35 yards to score.

New York University started blasting juicy chunks out of that Fordham line in the second period to get in a position to stage a telling aerial offense with Smith tossing to Siegel. On two of these tosses, Siegel went 40 yards to the 4-yard line and then Smith exploded himself through center for the score.

A few seconds later, the Violets got down on the 27-yard line again. Smith backed up and dropped a short delayed pass over center into White's arms and he was on his way for the second New York University score.

Washington U. 36-12 Victor Over Butler

St. Louis, Nov. 11 (AP).—Displaying a diversified attack, the Washington University Bears defeated Butler University of Indianapolis, 36 to 12, before an Armistice Day football crowd of 4,000 here today.

It was Washington's first Missouri Valley Conference victory of the season and ended Butler's schedule without a conference triumph. The Bears made 12 first downs to the Bulldog's 7, and gained 246 yards from scrimmage to 176 for Butler.

Oklahoma Turns Back Missouri Tigers, 21-0

Columbia, Mo., Nov. 11 (AP).—A mixed passing and running attack directed by Quarter Back Bob Dunlap gave the Oklahoma Sooners a 21 to 0 decision over the Missouri Tigers here today before a homecoming crowd estimated at 7,000.

Dunlap drove the Sooners on a 50-yard charge which carried over the goal line with himself as scorer 10 minutes after the Big Six Conference game started.

Missouri never carried its charge inside Oklahoma's 40-yard line and was on defense most of the time.

Brown Takes First Major Victory

Karaban Hero in 10-7 Win Over Syracuse, Scoring All Bruin Points.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 11 (AP). Bill Karaban gave the Brown football team its first major victory of the year today by scoring all the Brown points and defeating Syracuse, 10 to 7, before a small crowd of 3,300.

After Mickey Walker, brilliant Bruin sophomore, had run back a Syracuse punt to the Orange 20-yard line in the third period and three attempts to gain through the line had proved futile, Karaban place-kicked the ball through the middle of the Syracuse uprights from the Orange 22-yard line to break an existing 0-to-0 deadlock.

Soon afterward a 34-yard pass, Karaban to Norm Appleyard, the latter substituting for Capt. Joe Buonanno in the Bruin back field, put the ball on the Syracuse 10-yard line and three plays later Karaban cracked the Orange line for a touchdown from the 2-yard strip. Karaban's try for the extra point was good and Brown was ahead, 10 to 0.

80-Yard March.

Mertz threw a beautiful pass to Johnson late in the third period which started Syracuse on an 80-yard drive to its lone touchdown. As the third quarter closed, Syracuse had the ball on the Brown 4-yard line and on the third play of the final quarter, Lew Stark hurdled the center of the Brown line from the 1 foot mark for a touchdown. Joe Vavra was called out of the Syracuse line to kick the extra point.

For the rest of the final quarter, Brown held the upper hand. In the latter stages of the frame the Bruins reached the Syracuse 18-yard line, but lost the ball on downs.

In the opening half, the Bruins were in the Syracuse territory continually, but the big Orange line managed to stand up under the pressure to keep the Bruins from scoring.

Karaban, Caito and Walker figured prominently in the Bruin victory. Dinunzio and Mertz stood out for the defeated Orangemen.

Southern Methodist Defeats Texas A. & M.

College Station, Tex., Nov. 11 (AP). Fleet Robert Wilson and smashing Bob Turner, Southern Methodist backs, ripped open the Texas A. & M. defensive and aided in bottling up the Aggies' offensive, to give their Mustang mates a 19-to-0 Southwest Conference victory today.

The last half was played in rain, but it did not prevent the teams from calling on all the formations in the book.

Mississippi Staters Bow to Tulane, 33 to 0

Tulane Stadium, New Orleans, Nov. 11 (AP).—Held scorless for two quarters, Tulane got organized in the last half of the Armistice Day game with Mississippi State to score a 33-0 victory. Roberts repeated his Colgate performance by sprinting 76 yards for the first score.

West Virginia Wisconsin Victim

Three Touchdowns Made by Badgers Near End of 25-to-6 Game.

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 11 (AP).—Scoring one touchdown in the initial period and three in rapid succession near the end of the game, Wisconsin routed West Virginia, 25-6, in an intersectional football clash today.

The Badgers opened the scoring on an 18-yard pass, Karl Schuelke to John Fish, who scampered 25 yards to the goal line without a hand touching him. Capt. Smith place kicked the extra point.

In the third period the Mountaineers scored in four plays from the 50-yard line. Covey, right half back, hit center for first down on the 36-yard line, George "Eck" Allen, quarter back, faded back and passed to Wilson, substitute end, who ran to the 4-yard line and then Allen lunged over for a touchdown.

Allen's fumble on his 27-yard line on an end run paved the way for Wisconsin's second touchdown early in the last period. The Badgers used running plays to the 14-yard line when Tom Fontaine, half back, passed to Len Lovshin, end, who eluded Allen to cross the goal line.

The Mountaineers lost the ball on downs on their 36-yard line and Wisconsin opened up a drive that culminated in the third marker. Fontaine took the ball over from the 2-yard line.

On the first play following the next kick-off, Fontaine intercepted Allen's pass on the 50-yard line, cut to the right sideline and stepped through a broken field in a spectacular run for the final touchdown.

to smear the Tiger backs before they could get started.

Princeton's best offensive display came at the outset of the game, when they put on a 62-yard campaign that carried them as far as Dartmouth's 18-yard stripe. Late in the third period they got within 6 yards of another touchdown, but that was after they had recovered a Dartmouth fumble. Dartmouth put on one 38-yard drive.

The two teams were even-Stephen in the matter of first downs, each compiling eight. The winners had a wide advantage in rushing the ball, rolling up 144 yards to Dartmouth's 57 when the Indians' end-running attack was stacked up by Princeton's hard-tackling secondary, but honors were about square in the aerial department. Dartmouth completed five tosses for 61 yards; Princeton eight for 64 yards.

The early stages of the game were marred by fumbling, and the latter stages by penalties. Almost every time you looked up Referee Maginnes was stepping off a few yards. In all, he stepped off 90 against Princeton and 73 against Dartmouth, by far the biggest individual ground gainer of the day.

FRANKLIN FIELD, Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—The Buckeyes of Ohio State drubbed Pennsylvania University football team before 40,000 shivering fans today, 20 to 7.

The invaders met unexpected resistance and failed to make headway against the stubborn Pennsylvanians until the second quarter, when they took the ball at midfield and, aided by a 15-yard penalty, smashed down the field for a touchdown. For the remainder of the game the supremacy of the Ohioans was never in doubt.

The first score was made by Kabealo, who caught a pass from Cramer, substitute quarter back, on the 9-yard line and raced over the goal.

Smith Makes Score.

Later in the same quarter, Ohio State took the ball on the Penn 45-yard line and, after Smith and Heekin made a first down on the 16-yard line, Smith rounded left end for a touchdown. The next score was made after a 72-yard march down the field.

Cramer, Smith and Kabealo made steady gains and were aided by a pass, Cramer to Smith, which was good for 24 yards. The touchdown was made by Smith in a 2-yard charge through left tackle. Pennsylvania appeared to find itself later, and started a determined offensive after Palumbo recovered a fumble by Oliphant.

Impetus was given the offense when Brown recovered an attempted punt by McCracken for a 20-yard gain. Lima, substitute full back, placed the ball on the 1-yard line, and a pass, Brown to McCracken, was good for a touchdown.

Fumble Ends Drive.

Ohio State threatened again when successive line plunges and a long triple pass, Kabealo, Heekin to Cramer, was good for 42 yards and placed the ball on the 3-yard line. Cramer fumbled and Penn recovered.

Villanova Is Upset By Boston College

Eagles Show Unexpected Power to Win, 9 to 0.

Newton, Mass., Nov. 11 (AP).—Boston College provided a minor upset today as it downed a powerful Villanova eleven by a 9-to-0 score. The Eagles, showing a far more powerful line than they had displayed all season, throttled the Villanova attack, which previously this year had piled up 192 points in seven games, and in turn displayed an offense which kept Villanova at bay during most of the game.

Villanova started off strong. Within two minutes it was on the Boston College 5-yard line with a first down, through the medium of a fumble by Dougan, followed by a 15-yard run by Randour. It tried futilely to penetrate the Eagle frontier and after four downs had advanced only 1 yard.

Apparently inspired by this stand, Boston College started a drive of its own. A pass from Freitas to Tosi brought the ball to the 9-yard line Villanova stiffened, but on the fourth down, Ed Kelly, place-kicking artist, was rushed into the game and put the ball over the cross-bars for 3 points.

Early in the second period a Randour punt was blocked by Tosi and Ohrenberger recovered for Boston on the Villanova 26-yard line. Again the Eagles took advantage of a break and went from this point. Freitas passed the ball over the goal line for the touchdown.

Northwestern Bows, 3-0, to Illinois

Cook Boots 22-Yards for Placement Before 40,000 Crowd.

DYCHE STADIUM, Evanston, Ill., Nov. 11 (AP).—A crowd of 40,000 shivering spectators saw Illinois triumph over Northwestern, 3 to 0, today, scoring a victory over the Wildcats for the first time in five years.

As a result the fighting Illini remained in the race for the Western Conference gridiron championship.

Illinois achieved its victory in the third period of a desperately fought game when Dave Cook, son of Jimmy Cook, one of Illinois outstanding athletes of other days, booted a perfect 22-yard goal from placement after the ball had been advanced by a long forward pass tossed by Jack Beynon, the Illini star quarter back.

They had attempted to smash their way through the Northwestern line but when all their efforts were repulsed, Cook registered the winning three points with his kick that sailed smack between the goal posts.

Passes Fail Wildcats.

Northwestern, in desperation, attempted to score through the air in the closing minutes of the game, tossing forward passes and smashing through 45 yards down the field. They made three first downs on aerial shots, with Augustson heaving the ball to Cruice and Sullivan. But they were stopped when a final long pass landed on the Illinois 5-yard line.

The game was spectacular because of the open play of both elevens. They fought on even terms for the first period with each threatening to score with forward passes. Northwestern came dangerously near scoring when Olson tossed a 33-yard pass to Manske, who dropped the oval when only 5 yards from Illinois' goal.

In the second period Northwestern dashed to Illinois' 7-yard line with Olson missing a first down by a yard when knocked out of bounds on an end run.

Holy Cross Routs Manhattan, 27-6

20,000 See Crusaders Win Sixth Game of Season.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—Holy Cross defeated Manhattan College 27-6, before 20,000 at Ebbets Field today, but the powerful Crusaders knew they had been in a battle before winning their sixth victory of the season.

With former Gov. Alfred E. Smith looking on, Manhattan played like an inspired eleven for the first three periods, when the score stood 13-6. In the end, however, the superior weight and skill of the Crusaders prevailed, Manhattan permitting the Worcester warriors to chalk up two touchdowns in the last period after Jim Hobin had let loose an amazing barrage of forward passes.

Holy Cross drew first blood. Hobin hurled a 35-yard forward pass to Tom Callan, who sped 10 yards more and crossed the goal line standing up. John O'Connor circled his own left end for the second Crusader touchdown a few minutes later and this time Charley Harvey kicked successfully for the extra point.

The Crusader lead was cut down in the second quarter when Capt. Bill Pendergast sliced off tackle for 7 yards and a touchdown for Manhattan.

Colgate in Romp; Victorious, 72-0

Subs Pile Up Score on Ohio Northern.

Hamilton, N. Y., Nov. 11 (AP). With substitutes in the line-up, Colgate's Red Raiders romped to a 72-0 victory over Ohio Northern here this afternoon while the first team sat on the bench and watched the replacements score more than a point a minute.

Ohio Northern was no match for the home team. Colgate rolled up 32 first downs to none for the visitors and made 21 points in the first quarter; 25 in the second; 13 in the third, and 13 more in the final period.

With the exception of the first team, Coach Andy Kerr sent every man on the squad into the game. The game was replete with long runs. Dick Offenhamer, substitute back, made the longest. It was a 60-yard sprint in the third quarter.

Pitt Halts Bid Of Duquesne In Slush

Weinstock Leads Panthers to Victory Over Less-Experienced Foe.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 11 (AP).—Spirit and fight bowed today to experience and power before 58,000 witnesses in the Pitt Stadium as the Golden Panthers of Pitt, robed in blue, erased ambitious Duquesne from the ranks of the Nation's unbeaten in football. The score was 7 to 0.

The Dukes played their hearts out against the hard-hitting and experienced Panthers, but they failed to stop Izzy Weinstock, Pitt's 190-pound full back, while their own line, sturdy and stanch on most occasions, fell down on the job of protecting their forward passers.

Weinstock Is Hero.

Weinstock was the hero, repeating his performance of the Notre Dame game, both on attack and defense. He lugged the oval 14 times for a gain of 54 yards, a remarkable performance considering that a steady fall of rain which turned into sleet and snow at times, made the field a mass of mud and slush.

A Pitt pass, O'Dell to Matesic, carried the ball from the Dukes' 40 to their 17 late in the third period. Matesic gained 4 yards on two plunges and then Weinstock knifed through left tackle and crossed the goal line standing up. He also kicked the extra point.

Nebraska Cops Big Six Title Third Year

Victor Over Kansas, 12-0, to Keep State Clean; 31,000 Watch.

LINCOLN, Nebr., Nov. 11 (AP). Two perfectly executed pass plays, handled by three Cornhuskers who have played football together for 8 years led Nebraska to a 12-to-0 victory here today over Kansas and a third consecutive Big Six Conference championship.

It was the first time any team had won the Big Six crown 3 years in succession and left Nebraska one of the few undefeated and untied teams this season.

A record crowd of 31,000 fans, the largest here since 1928, saw a hard-charging Jayhawk eleven nearly sweep the Cornhuskers off their feet in the opening quarter. But the strong right arm of George Sauer, triple threat full back, sent a 40-yard pass to Bruce Kilbourne, end, midway in the next period and Kilbourne raced untouched 32 yards for a touchdown.

Turns Tide of Game.

The 72-yard gain turned the tide of the game and Nebraska nearly scored again a few minutes afterward, but the place kick of Virgil Yelkin, substitute, was blocked on the last play of the first half.

The scarlet-clad team began to batter its way through the Jayhawks after the rest period, but it took one of the Cornhuskers' basket ball plays to score. With less than four minutes gone in the last quarter, Nebraska had the ball on the Kansas 25-yard line. Sauer whipped a short pass over the line to Kilbourne and he pitched a lateral over over the heads of a pair of Jayhawkers to big Bernie Masterson, Scarlet quarter back, who sidestepped his way to the touchdown.

Masterson missed both tries for the extra point.

Rutgers Retains Title, Downs Lafayette, 20-13

Easton, Pa., Nov. 11 (AP).—Rutgers' scarlet band of gridiron warriors retained the championship of the Middle Three today by nipping the Lafayette eleven, 20 to 13. Touchdowns in each of the first three periods put the New Brunswick team ahead after Lafayette scored in the first and second sessions.

Utah's Comeback Wins Over Colorado

Salt Lake City, Nov. 11 (AP). Utah University's Rocky Mountain Conference football championship tottered precariously here today in its game with Colorado University, but the Utes had enough stamina to come back strong in the closing minutes of play to win out, 13 to 6.

They have been the mountain titleholders five years.

St. Joseph Wins, 7-0, From Wash. College

Philadelphia, Nov. 11 (AP).—Scoring in the opening period and then content to hold their opponents for the rest of the game, the St. Joseph College football team downed a fighting Washington College eleven 7 to 0 today.

Half Back Johnny Kane hit the line for the touchdown after a determined downfield drive. From then on Washington tried in vain to score both on the ground and in the air.

NOTRE DAME STADIUM, South Bend, Ind., Nov. 11 (U.P.)—Purdue rolled on to its twentieth straight triumph without defeat today and remained among the Nation's select group of unbeaten teams by scoring a 19-to-0 victory over Notre Dame before a crowd of 37,000.

The Irish were held scoreless for the fourth straight time and bowed in defeat for the fourth time in six games played this year.

Two long, spectacular passes by Purdue and a misdirected and ill-advised pass by Notre Dame deep in its own territory spelled three touchdowns for the Boilermakers, the biggest total run-up on Notre Dame this year. It was the forty-sixth straight game since 1928 in which Purdue has scored.

Pass Is Intercepted.

The break of the game came early in the second period after Notre Dame had stopped Purdue on the Irish 2-yard line.

Notre Dame had the ball on its own 16-yard line and attempted to pass. Nick Lukats threw the ball into the waiting arms of Fred Febel, Purdue right guard, who ran 16 yards unmolested for the Boilermakers' first touchdown. This started the Irish on the road to their fourth straight defeat.

Purdue's other touchdowns came on long passes in the third and fourth periods.

Two costly fumbles put Purdue in a position to throw the first touchdown pass. Andy Pilney, Notre Dame left half back, stopped a Notre Dame march deep into Purdue territory when he fumbled. Duane Purvis recovered for the Boilermakers on his own 20-yard line. He then punted to Pilney and the Notre Dame back fumbled again, Pardonner recovering on Notre Dame's 48-yard line.

Pardonner Scores.

Purvis smashed through for 13 yards. Fred Hecker faded back and threw a 35-yard pass to Pardonner, stocky little Purdue quarter back, who caught the ball on the 10-yard line, and ran over the goal standing up.

Near the end of the game, Hecker dropped back and hurled a 40-yard pass to Purvis, who snared the ball on the 10-yard line, and ran the rest of the way for the touchdown. Two Notre Dame backs collided with each other in attempting to break up the pass.

When Pardonner dropkicked the first point after touchdown, it was the twenty-seventh time in 29 attempts he had successfully kicked goal. He missed the second one in the third period and then failed to run around end after the third touchdown.

first downs, and from the 4-yard line Buckler, in two tries, made another touchdown, again kicking the extra point.

Buckler was taken out of the game before the third period ended, but Simons, who replaced him, added another touchdown in the final quarter, after another running attack started by Nazzaro's interception of Wells' pass on Harvard's 41-yard line. Sebastion, Nazzaro and Simons advanced the ball to the 2-yard line, from which point Simons scored off left tackle. His place kick attempt for the extra point failed.

Four Passes Good.

The game ended after Wells had completed four successive passes for Harvard, for a total of 53 yards.

Washington and Lee Beats Virginia, 6 to 0, on Sawyers' 85-Yard Punt Return

Teams Battle From Start To Finish

Mattox Misses W. & L. Field Goal Early in First Quarter.

Generals Threatening as Whistle Sounds to End First Half.

WILSON FIELD, Lexington, Va., Nov. 11 (Spl.).—Joe Sawyers, playing his last home game for Washington & Lee, beat Virginia here today when he ran Johnson's punt back the side line 85 yards to cross the goal line just ahead of the nearest Virginia pursuer for the only score of the game, which ended, 6-0.

The game was close throughout, each team making 8 first downs, and threatened to end in a scoreless deadlock until Sawyers' stunning run at the beginning of the fourth quarter put the Generals ahead. Mattox's place kick for the point after touchdown was wide.

A home-coming day crowd of 6,000 filled the stands at Wilson Field and applauded vigorously as 27 past football captains of Washington and Lee teams were introduced between the halves of the game.

Generals' Drive Halted.

As the game began, the Generals started a drive that carried the ball to Virginia's 12-yard line, where an attempted field goal by Mattox was blocked by Wager, Cavalier center, who recovered on the 16-yard line. Johnson kicked and the Generals worked the ball to the Virginia 18 when Seaton passed over the goal line. Johnson kicked out to the Washington and Lee 38 and Virginia gained on the exchange of punts when Munger ran Sawyers' kick back to the Generals' 40-yard line. The teams played on even terms for the rest of the quarter.

Virginia got its first down in the second quarter when Fryberger dashed around end for 10 yards from the Generals' 48. Berger smashed the line for another in three plays. Then the Cavaliers were forced to kick and the ball went over the goal line. McFadden was sent in to pass as the half neared its end, and when Virginia interferred with intended receivers two of his attempts were ruled good, giving Washington and Lee a first down on the Cavalier 13-yard line. Caldwell knocked down one of McFadden's passes over the goal line as the half ended.

After a kicking duel at the beginning of the half Henthorne fumbled a pass when tackled by Wager and Berger recovered for Virginia. The Cavaliers then started a running and passing attack that was finally broken up when Sawyers intercepted a pass. The rest of the quarter was even. In the last period after Sawyers ran back for the only score of the game, Virginia started a passing attack deep in their own territory that carried the ball to the Washington and Lee 16-yard line. Here the Generals broke it up and were in possession of the ball when the game ended.

Fryberger, Berger and Johnson stood out for the Cavaliers, and the whole Generals' back field played sterling football.

Washington and Lee is unbeaten in the State and the Southern Conference, but a tie with V. P. I. mars its record.

Kercheval Gets 15 Points; Smith Makes Score for Virginia Cadets.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 11 (AP).—Today's game between the University of Kentucky Wildcats and the Virginia Military Institute Cadets was a personal triumph for Ralph Kercheval, the Wildcats' great full back, who is rounding out his third year as a Kentucky star. Kentucky won, 21 to 6.

Kercheval scored 15 points, including two touchdowns and three points after. His first touchdown was made in the first quarter, when he sprinted 32 yards to the Cadets' goal line. His second was made in the fourth quarter on a 10-yard run around left end after Pug Bach, Kentucky half back, had put the ball within scoring distance with a 40-yard return of a V. M. I. punt.

Batch scored the Wildcats' third touchdown in the fourth quarter, circling right end.

V. M. I.'s lone touchdown came in the second quarter. After Kercheval had punted 60 yards, V. M. I. started a march from its own 31-yard line that finally sent Smith over right tackle for the score on a 2-yard dash.

For the Cadets, Smith did most of the effective work, while Law, although crippled, snagged several passes and tackled well on defense.

Columbia, S. C., Nov. 11 (AP).—Earl Claryn Dean, of the Gamecock ball carriers, fought his way through to two touchdowns today to lead South Carolina to a 14-to-0 victory over the N. C. State Wolfpack.

The triumph, garnered before an Armistice Day crowd of 3,500, wound up the Southern Conference season for the Gamecocks without a defeat or tie. They had downed Clemson and Virginia Poly in earlier games.

Both teams fought fiercely for advantage through the first half, but two fast-charging lines, bolstered by back-field assistance, prevented any scoring.

A safety, scored by Huskey, Bird tackle, early in the third period, broke the ice, and the South Carolina offense hurtled into action.

As that period ended, Clary, the "Gaffney ghost," a substitute, on a fake reserve reeled off 24 yards to the goal to the cheers of wildly rooting spectators.

Navy Plebes Humble Cook Academy, 46 to 0

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 11 (Spl.). The Navy Plebes, with a heavier team that displayed versatile attack, ran roughshod over Cook Academy, of Montour Falls, N. Y., in their annual contest here today, 46 to 0. The visitors, however, fought pluckily throughout and made one determined bid to score about midway of the fourth period, but their hopes were dashed when, after advancing inside the Plebes' 10-yard line, fumbled, and the ball was recovered by the Naval lads.

The Plebes scored a touchdown on the second play of the game, when Schmidt broke around Cook's left flank for a 65-yard sprint. In the second period, Wilsie and Edwards each made dashes of 55 yards to touchdowns. The Plebes scored three times in rather quick succession in the third period, and again in the fourth, when second-stringers were carrying the burden.

Emory, Henry Wins From Indians, 25-6

William-Mary Defense Is Shattered by Foes in Night Contest.

EMORY, Va., Nov. 11 (AP).—Emory and Henry proved too strong for William and Mary's Indians here tonight and the final whistle found the home team with a 25-6 victory.

Emory and Henry's Wasps scored four minutes after the game opened. Capt. Noftsinger recovered a fumble on William and Mary's 24-yard line and Sims and Mark Kegley plunged into the line for short gains to make a first down on the Indians' 11-yard stripe. Kegley then streaked around right end for a touchdown. Eller placekicked goal.

Before the period ended, the Wasps scored again. Kegley ran a punt back to the Indians' 33 and Marshall shot a pass to Propps over the goal line for a touchdown. The kick for the goal was wide. Another pass, Marshall to Miller, for 20 yards, put the ball on the Indians' 11 as the period ended.

Dyer, on the first play of the second period, crashed right guard for a touchdown. Sims failed to convert.

The Indians, taking the next kick-off, marched to the Emory 20, where the Wasps held and took the ball on their own 19. An offensive carried to the Indian 20, where the ball was lost on downs. Shortly before the half ended the Indians passed to the Wasps' 19, but again could not penetrate the Emory defense. The half ended with the Wasps in possession in midfield.

A 60-yard march in the third period gave the Indians a touchdown. Passes and short runs carried to the Wasp 5-yard mark and Chalko plunged through the line for a touchdown. Stewart missed a placement try for the extra point.

William and Mary 6, Emory and Henry 19.

A short punt by Propps and Kegley's return of a punt to the Indian 14 led to the next score in the fourth period. A fumble was recovered by the Indians on their own 11, but Sands and Mackey partially blocked Franklin's punt which carried only 10, to his own 28. Marshall passed to Propps over the goal line on the next play. Mackey failed to kick goal. The game ended with the Indians passing desperately.

DENNY STADIUM, University, Ala., Nov. 11 (AP).—Alabama's Red Elephants crushed a Virginia Tech eleven today that was unable to mark up a first down, thrilling 10,000 home-coming day spectators with a 27-to-0 win.

In two plays Casey and Mills crashed tackle for 4 yards and went into Alabama territory the first time on the Crimson 48, the closest they ever came to the Red Elephant goal line. Campbell stopped the thrust, intercepting Mill's pass on Alabama's 40, and running it back to his own 45.

The Red Elephants started shock troops and had the Gobblers shoved back in their own territory through the first period, scoring once, and had the ball deep in Virginia Tech area when the period ended.

Varsity Plays Half Game.

The varsity was left in for two periods, punching over three touchdowns and blocking a punt that Virginia Tech converted into safety by alertness.

Both teams fenced for a few minutes after the opening kick-off, then the speedy reserve back field turned loose its attack as Charlie Stapp, 156-pound speedster, reeled off 10 yards to make the first down. That touched off a 62-yard drive, with Stapp and McDanal alternating off tackles and around ends for five first downs in eight plays. Riley Smith, full back, sliced off tackle for 5 yards to score, but Jim Whatley's kick from placement was wide.

Virginia Tech's most spectacular bid for a score came on the kick-off after the touchdown. Al Casey, a bundle of dynamite, took the kick-off near the goal line and sprinted for the sideline, sidestepping and stiff-arming a swarm of tackles that closed in. Up the sideline he sped for 48 yards before Tilden Campbell, safety man, brought him down.

Later Howell ran a punt back to the Tech 35. The power house was turned on with Howell, Angelich and Demyanovich punching tackles and ends for two first downs on the Gobbler 1. Demyanovich crashed center for the touchdown. Moseley's kick from placement was wide.

An exchange of punts after the kick-off set the stage for another touchdown with Alabama starting from her own 47, and Angelich and Howell making quick off-tackle stabs that carried to the Gobbler 1, Howell after a 25-yard sprint being pulled down on the Gobbler 1.

Howell was smothered for a 9-yard loss, then Angelich sliced off tackle for 10 yards and a touchdown. Moseley's place kick was low.

Nine plays after the kick-off in the third period Alabama scored again, Howell slicing off tackle for 16 to score. Moseley set the stage running back an intercepted pass 24 yards to the Gobbler 21. Moseley converted from placement.

A blocked punt which Mills recovered in the end zone accounted for two points on a safety.

The resreves went back in the fourth period and while threatening lacked the power for the last yard through the fighting Gobbler line which held once on its own 1-foot line.

Grimes Is Not Content To Quit Diamond Game

St. Louis, Nov. 11 (AP).—Burleigh Grimes, snarling, stubble-bearded veteran of the baseball wars, who has served 18 fighting years on the pitching hill for six National League Clubs, may be near the end of the big league trail, but he's not ready to hang up his spiked shoes and glove.

With the recent release of Grimes, a moist ball pitcher, by the St. Louis Cardinals, Urban Faber, of the Chicago White Sox, is the only remaining spitball hurler in the major leagues.

Grimes could quit baseball gracefully. His 230-acre stock farm near New Haven, Mo., is a going concern. There are stacks of hay and shocks of fodder for the blooded cattle. There is plenty of corn and enough meat to take the Grimes family and the six farm hands through the winter.

For recreation, there are sleek saddle horses, a pony for the youngsters, and a "high school" horse, Crystal Lady, that can waltz, march and do other circus tricks.

Vanderbilt Eleven Defeats Sewanee

Commodores Break First Half Tie to Win, 27-14.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 11 (AP).—A purple-clad University of the South (Sewanee) eleven, fighting tenaciously to the last ditch, was swept aside by a punishing last half offensive as Vanderbilt's Commodores triumphed, 27 to 14 here today.

As a home-coming day crowd of more than 8,000 looked on, the Purple Tigers from Sewanee scored first and then held the Gold and Black eleven to a 14-to-14 count for the first two periods but was unable to gather momentum in the last half.

The victory was Vanderbilt's second in the Southeastern Conference championship battle and its thirty-first triumph against nine victories for Sewanee in a rivalry that began in 1891—one of the Nation's oldest traditional contests.

Wellford and Poage were the spark plugs of Sewannee's offensive, each breaking through for innumerable gains. The Tiger line fought gamely against a heavier Commodore forward wall but withered in the final minutes as the Gold and Black attack began clicking.

10 for the winners and 8 for the losers, but the Indians throughout the closing stages of the game seemed very definitely going places and doing things.

Stanford completed six passes out of seven attempts and its touchdown came after an overhead attack had advanced the ball to the shadow of the goal posts. Southern California completed 6 passes in 10 attempts for a trifle more yardage than that registered by the visitors, but the coordination was not so good.

The game was witnessed by a distinguished crowd, including former President Hoover. Half a dozen United States senators and other members of Congress gave the political world representation.

Today's Soccer Program Is Promising

Rosedale-Va. Ave. Feature; British Teams to Play Today.

THE Recreation Soccer League's stock took a decided upward trend over the week-end when four of its teams battled to close ties in intra-league games and a fifth member trounced a Capital City Soccer League club, the German-Americans, 4 to 0. The latter victory was earned by the Miller Furniture Co. eleven of the Recreation circuit.

Just as gratifying as these results to the Recreationers was the 4-to-1 win gained by Mitchell's Store over Marlboro in the Capital City League. Few are aware of it, but Mitchell's Store combination is the same team that won the Recreation title last year under the name of Virginia Avenue Playground.

Those who worked night and day to popularize soccer in the District in the early days, 1925, have mulled over these tasty morsels with lip-smacking satisfaction as it was agreed long ago that the life of the kicking game in the District depended entirely on the success of the American graduates of elementary schools. And 95 per cent of the Recreation League is exactly that.

Fine Sunday Program.

Next Sunday will find another all-star list of games in the Recreation League. Topping the list is the battle between Rosedale and Virginia Avenue on the Rosedale grounds at 1 o'clock. The Avenue kickers have a younger team than Rosedale but compare favorably in ability.

Next in point of interest will be the Miller Furniture booters opposed to the rejuvenated Takoma eleven on Monument, No. 2, at 1 o'clock. Coach Herman Riley threw a real surprise into the Dux A. C. last week when his eleven held it to a tie score and the Takoma boys are anxious to show the Miller team that this showing was not a flash in the pan.

Jim White, coach of Raymond, is apt to have a real surprise for New York Avenue on Monument No. 1 at 2:30. He has revamped his eleven and the Spring road boys are secretly expecting to stop the haughty N. Y. Avenue kickers.

British Sailors Play.

Old country soccer addicts who bemoan the fact that they seldom witness any of their native variety of the game here, need only to visit the Monument field today at 4 o'clock, as at that time sailors from H. M. S. Danae will do battle with the local British United eleven.

The Uniteds have added strength since Sunday and they will need all that can be mustered as the British Sailors have a very disconcerting way of giving the lie to the old saw about "sea legs." On several occasions in the past few years it has been the unfortunate experience of local teams to wish they had "sea legs" after tilts with the visiting seamen. The two clubs will meet again Sunday at 2:30 o'clock.

Stuart Jr. High Wins.

Coach Joe Larry's Stuart Junior High soccer eleven gave promise of being a strong contender for the junior high title yesterday when it had little difficulty in stopping the Paul squad by the score of 4 to 1. Macfarland and Langley will meet this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. The Elliot-Abbott match, also scheduled, has been postponed to permit the playing of the Danae-British United contest.

Deacons Trimmed By North Carolina

Chapel Hill, N. C., Nov. 11 (AP).—The University of North Carolina gave the Wake Forest Deacons no peace here today and tonight the Tarheels were celebrating a well-earned 26-to-0 Armistice Day victory over the Deacons.

Beautiful passes, a blocked punt and a spectacular 40-yard return of the pigskin after a Wake Forest punt in the last quarter gave the Heels four touchdowns and set the stage for a State championship game between Duke and Carolina Saturday.

Coach Chuck Collins' boys did not wait until they had been scored on to start their passing today and as a result counted two touchdowns by the aerial route and forced the Deacons deep in their own territory to pave the way for another from a blocked punt.

St. John's Conquers.

Swarthmore, Pa., Nov. 11 (AP).—St. John's College, of Annapolis, conquered Swarthmore's light football team, 12 to 8, today in a game that reverted to a punting duel for the most part. A line plunge by Carl MacCartee, of St. John's, scored the winning touchdown in the third period and broke a 6-6 deadlock. Swarthmore, in a late drive, could do no better than register a safety.

G. W.-Tulsa, Georgetown-Carnegie Tech Games to Top Week's Grid Card Here

Oilers Show Friday Night At Park

Colonials Are Underdogs Due to Loss of Trio of Banned Stars.

Hoyas Entertain Tech Saturday; Shepherd at Gallaudet.

Saturday.

Georgetown vs. Carnegie Tech, Griffith Stadium, 2 p. m.

Gallaudet vs. Shepherd, 2:30 o'clock, Kendall Green.

Catholic University vs. Manhattan, New York.

Maryland vs. Johns Hopkins, Municipal Stadium, Baltimore, 2 p. m.

COLLEGE football swings into the home-stretch of the campaign this week and all of the local teams will go forth to battle whether it be on their home fields or foreign soil.

Only three games are listed for the District, leading off with the George Washington-Tulsa affair at Griffith Stadium Friday night. Georgetown follows up the next day with Carnegie Tech at the ball park, and in the distance the dull thud of punting will echo from the table-like field at Kendall Green where Gallaudet and Shepherd College will be struggling through their annual gridiron battle.

Tulsa apparently carries a carload of rabbits' feet when it comes east for the G. W. game, for not since the teams have been meeting have the local minions emerged triumphant. George Washington had high hopes of repelling the Westerners this season, but with Baker, McCarver and Pearce banished from the lineup, it looks forward to the fray with gloomy forebodings.

Tulsa Highly Geared.

Tulsa walloped Oklahoma City, 33-0, yesterday, and will be in a savage mood when it encounters the Colonials.

Georgetown has little hopes of dispelling the ill-fortune which has overshadowed its football destinies this season with the plaid of Carnegie lined up on the opposite side of the ball. Four consecutive defeats are charged to the Hoyas, and very likely it will be five when Saturday's sun has set. A win over the Pittsburghers would go far toward restoring Georgetown's rapidly evaporating prestige.

Maryland will be fighting in its own class this week when it squares off with Johns Hopkins at Baltimore, and it looks like the Terps are going to snap their losing streak at the expense of the Bluejays. Hopkins was routed by Penn State's mediocre band of gridmen yesterday, 40-6, a favorable omen for the Old Liners.

Gallaudet figures to have an even chance against Shepherd, although the Rams always play their best when they visit Kendall Green. The game usually is bitterly contested and crammed to overflowing with thrills, and the 1933 version of this rivalry should be no exception.

Yale's Rally Fails As Georgia U. Wins

yards. The touchdown drive started from Georgia's 32-yard line when Key, running through a broken field like a minnow through rushes, ran 39 yards to Yale's 29-yard stripe. Chapman and Key then drove to Yale's 2-yard marker, where Chapman whammed it home. Grant's kick for the extra point split the middle.

The second period saw Georgia gain sensationally in midfield, but stall when a touchdown was in sight. It wasn't Key's fault, however, this little 142-pound mite turned in runs of 39, 15 and 20 yards respectively.

What Coach Reggie Root told Yale between the halves is not known, but whatever it was, it worked powerfully. Georgia opened the third period by kicking off to Yale's 28-yard line. In four smashing plays Yale had the ball on Georgia's 14-yard line.

The first of these was a 13-yard run by Keesling. The second was a line plunge for another 13 by the same man, the third was a pass, Curtin to Roscoe. The fourth was another plunge by the ubiquitous Keesling. Georgia held, however, and took the ball.

Yale came right back after the kick, however, and plowed to Georgia's 38-yard line. Again the men from Dixie batted down passes that would have tied the score. Again Georgia kicked out of danger, and again Yale, led by Keesling, moved into scoring position. The third period ended with the Elis, thanks to a 30-yard end sweep by Keesling, standing on the enemy's 20-yard line.

Georgia held again, taking the ball on its own 24-yard stripe. Late in the fourth period Yale threatened once more, but was foiled when Sam Brown, a substitute Georgia half back, who plays in a sleeveless jersey, took a punt on his own goal line and shaking off tackler after tackler raced straight down the middle to midfield.

Hitting the Headpin on District Alleys - - - .

Jumping on Hyattsville feet first to sweep the set, Northeast Temple maple shooters intensified the league pennant race last week by taking the top rung over King Pin on greater pinfall. Next Thursday night the big battle of the week looms at Convention Hall, where the champion Occidental Restaurants meet the Northeasters to possibly decide which club will head the procession at the beginning of the second series. King Pin, tackling Hyattsville, also will be prominent in a heated argument.

Knocked and scuffed the better part of the early campaign, Convention Hall made a mighty thrust last week to trim Occidental two games, which pulled the titleholders off their lofty perch.

But while his club was taking a beating, Earl McPhilomy was making his first real gesture of the season to retain his individual laurels. His 422 set was high for the week.

It was smiling Jack Talbert and the ever dependable George Honey who turned the trick for Ollie Pacini's Temple Club. The former hit for 393 and the latter for 389.

Ollie Webb, in characteristic manner, bobbed up in the limelight with high game for the week, 156. His 380 set led Georgetown to the odd win over Columbia.

Columbia Wins Over Navy, 14 to 7

Borries Makes a 75-Yard Run; Fumble Leads to Final Lion Score.

But this afternoon, though the Midshipmen seemed as strong and eager as they were a week ago, they weren't as good at guessing and the traffic was always rolling where they weren't. Montgomery's 10-yard pass went to Brominski, bringing the ball to the 20-yard line. Montgomery took a lateral pass for a first down at the 10-yard line and three plays later stepped over the goal to score.

Brominski kicked the point and the score was 7 to 0 when they changed goals.

Borries Runs 75 Yards.

Buzz Borries leaked through the Columbia line as the period was running out of time and, in one of those simple but inexplicable touchdown plays which leave the customers wondering how any such thing could happen, was away on a 75-yard run to a touchdown. The Navy had just received the ball on a punt at their 25-yard line and this Nevel, who had been slamming his weight against every hostile plunge up to then, stopping many of them dead or worse, had just gone out of the Columbia lineup. A boy named Otto Schwartz relieved him. On the first play after the punt, Borries took off slowly to his left, found all hostile personnel neatly parted into two groups with a gap between and with astonishment in his gait, picked up speed.

Up to this time Nevel would have come up to knock him to the grass, but Nevel was pausing on the sideline on his trot to the lockers, his helmet dangling from his grimy hand. And Otto Schwartz was not where Nevel, to judge from his mighty past performances, would have placed himself to stop the play. So Borries went away, cut over to his right somewhat, got past Montgomery and was off to a touchdown that enabled the Navy to tie the score at the intermission.

Dick Bull, the Navy's kicker, came in and plunked the ball neatly over the bar.

Make Great Stand.

The Midshipmen made one great scrap which stood off a touchdown momentarily in the third period. Unable to gain themselves, they called on Bill Clark, sometimes the most reliable punter on this seaboard, to kick the windbag down the lot for them. His kicks had not been up to their usual standard today but this one was all right and it carried high and far to Columbia's 35-yard line. Montgomery was slipping tacklers all afternoon and hopping over others who had been dumped for him and he ran the ball back 25 yards.

Before the Navy could shake itself together Brominski drove off tacle to a first down at their 25-yard line and Montgomery closed the next sequence with a charge of 8 yards through the middle to a first down 8 yards from the goal. The Navy piled up Montgomery and Brominski for a net gain of 1 yard on the next three plays and Newell Wilder, a center, was called in to attempt a field goal for Columbia. He made his kick from about 17 yards out, but failed and the Navy had still some reason to hope.

Fumble Proves Costly.

The ball was theirs 2 yards out and Midshipman Baumgarner fumbled on the first attempt to move it away from there. Paul Jackel, a Columbia guard recovered on the Navy's 18-yard line. Barabas ripped through the middle of a scattered defense for 14 yards and Montgomery made the other 4 yards and the second Columbia touchdown on the next play.

This time Wilder kicked the goal.

They had something less than a full house in their little wooden college ballpark on the northerly crags of Manhattan Island, about 30,000 head, at a guess. The weather was fair and cold and the mood gay and collegiate but nonalcoholic.

The customers simply are not keeping up in their drinking this fall in these parts.

Maryland Bows To Duke's Power

Maryland 12-yard line, but Widmyer knocked the aerial heave into Bernie Buscher's mitts, who traveled to his 42-yard line. But the Duke line held and Widmyer was forced to kick.

Alexander, smashing his way through on practically every stab, again brought the ball deep into the Terp territory. Seven plays had brought the ball to the Maryland 21-yard line as the quarter ended.

The entire first team of Duke University entered the fray at the start of the second chapter.

Cox Plunges Over.

McAnnish carried the ball on a wide left-end swing to the Terp 3-yard line, where Bob Cox, Blue Devil full back, plunged over for the score. Cox added the extra point.

Late in the second period, the Duke team started on another drive lugging the ball to the Maryland 22-yard line, but McAninsh fumbled and the Terps recovered. It was at this point that Willis Benner turned College Park inside out with his 50-yard run for a touchdown after grabbing a 25-yard toss hurled by Dick Nelson.

Following the Maryland score, the Old Liners kicked off and Rossiter took the ball on his 8-yard line and traveled to the 32. On the next play, Laney zipped a heave to Tom Rogers on the Duke 45 and the Duke end galloped the remaining 55 yards for the score. Cox booted the point after touchdown.

Maryland Rally Fails.

But the Maryland team was playing heads-up ball, and taking to the air. Two long heaves by George Sacks to his half backs, B. Buscher and Benner, brought the ball to the Duke 12. Dick Nelson smashed off-tackle for 6 on the 6-yard line, but a lateral in the next play went haywire, the ball bounding back to the Duke 20, where it was recovered by Al Means for Duke. The lateral was intended to go to Sacks to Benner.

Duke kicked out of danger to Benner, who advanced the ball 15 yards to the Maryland 35. Dick Nelson then shot a long, lazy heave to Ennis from the Terps' 30 to the Duke 25, where the Old Liners' end galloped to the 18. On a short pass over the line, Sacks to Benner, brought the ball to the 5, Snyder, sub for Sacks, carried the leather to the 2-yard line as the half ended.

The Blue Devils started the second half with the second string eleven. Alexander on a spinner off-tackle brought the ball to the Maryland 38. Laney and Alexander knifed their way to the 23, then Ward hit off left end to the Maryland 10-yard line. Alexander bounced over center to the 7-yard line. Laney plunged to the Maryland 1-foot line. Jule Ward scored on a wide left end run.

Poor Punt Hurts Old Liners.

A bad Maryland punt which traveled but 10 yards gave the Blue Devils the ball on the 25. Laney, on three successive plays, brought the ball to the 8. Ward tore his way to the Terp 1-yard line and Alexander smashed off tackle for the tally.

Lew Ennis recovered Dick McAnish's fumble on the Maryland 35 early in the fourth stanza, but after three tries Maryland was obliged to kick to its 45.

Rossiter on three tries, a 28-yard gallop and a 9-yard run, brought the ball from the Duke 22 to the Maryland 45. Laney southpawed a 15-yard heave to Jules Ward on the Maryland 35-yard line who sped unmolested the remaining distance over the goal line for his second touchdown and Duke's sixth of the game.

Rice Trims Arkansas By Point After Score

Houston, Tex., Nov. 11 (AP).—Leche Sylvester's educated toe provided the margin of victory in today's football game betwen Rice Institute and the University of Arkansas, and Rice won, 7 to 6, after scoring a touchdown in the final period. Arkansas had counted in the third quarter on a pass, from Murphy to LaForge.

The defeat was Arkansas' first in Southwest Conference competition. It was the Owls' first victory in more than a month and their first of the season against conference opposition.

Baylor Upsets Texas With Field Goal, 3 to 0

Austin, Tex., Nov. 11 (AP).—Aubrey Stringer, Baylor University full back, wrote his name in large letters in the football annals of the Southwest Conference here today when he kicked a goal from placement in the last half-minute of play to defeat the favored University of Texas, 3 to 0.

The ball was kicked from the Texas 29-yard line. It was only 12 yards in from the sideline.

The defeat was the first of the conference season for Texas.

Bob Sall Captures AAA Dirt Track Title

Richmond, Va., Nov. 11 (AP).—Bob Sall, of Paterson, N. J., today won the 1933 Eastern A. A. A. dirt track championship over the State Fair half-mile course, but lost a heart-breaking contest in the feature event as a field of more than 25 pilots drew the curtain over the season's automobile race competition.

Crippled Bison Grid Team Beaten

Richmond Is Hampton Star as Howard Is Routed by 28-0 Score.

PORTLY Seasiders from Hampton Institute yesterday crumpled a crippled Howard University Bison eleven, at Howard Stadium, scoring in the second, third and final periods for a final count, 28-0.

Brilliant broken field running by Berry Williams, and outstanding defensive work by Gaither, former benchwarmer, could not make up for the absence of "Showboat" Ware and Joe Sewell, who have been on the injured list since the Morgan clash.

Richmond, Virginian full back, laid the foundation for Hampton's initial touchdown, when Sutler kicked over the Hampton line and the Seasiders started to march from the 20-yard line. He ripped through the Howard line for 45 yards at the start and, following gains by Culler and Hooker, went around the Howard right end 7 yards to the Hampton 32-yard line.

Richmond Reverses Play.

Richmond reversed the play, racing around the Bison left end for 15 yards to first down on the Howard 17-yard line. Reversing again, he made 10 yards around left end to the 7-yard line, and Culler was sent over for the count. Richmond made the extra point, dropkicking handily.

The same Richmond threw a 35-yard pass to "Scoops" Carter early in the second half, and Carter stumbled 10 yards for the second touchdown, Richmond adding the extra point. When Howard fumbled on her 20-yard line in the final quarter, Weatherford rushed off tackle 17 yards, and Edwards drove 6 yards through center for second down and 1 to go. Weatherford took the pigskin over and Richmond again dropkicked the extra point.

With two minutes to play, Richmond skipped around the Bisons' left end for the first down out of bounds on the Bison 19-yard line. Weatherford gained 14 yards around right end, tried to buck center for no gain and then added the final count around left end. It was Richmond's turn to boot and he dropkicked his fourth point.

Catholic U. Bows To Detroit Passes dove for him, picked up a procession of interferers, who seemed to rise out of the cleat-scarred turf, and streaked over the final chalk mark for the second touchdown.

Coach Bergman managed to resuscitate his frayed pigskin scholars between halves and C. U. came back with a rush in the third quarter that seeped down to Detroit's 8-yard line before the visiting plumbers repaired the leak.

McVean was hauled to earth on his own 40-yard line, following Nott's punt, at the start of the parade. The Gearty duo, "Babe" and Tom, bored through the Titan wall to the 28-yard line, where Detroit braced momentarily and C. U. called for time out to give the matter its serious consideration. Tom Gearty resumed hostilities with brief gallop that ended on the 10-yard line, where C. U.'s steamroller fell apart. Two consecutive passes failed and Detroit regained possession of the ball.

Charley McVean gave the C. U. students someting to cheer about in the third period when he got off three beautiful punts, all better than 50 yards that dropped into the end zone. But they groaned a little later when Williams broke through, blocked another of McVean's punts, and recovered on the 1-yard line. It was a comparatively simple matter for McCracken to get the touchdown on an off-tackle plunge.

Tom Gearty brought the assemblage to its feet on the ensuing kick-off which he returned 45 yards, escaping all but one Detroit man, before brought to earth.

But C. U.'s cheers turned to tears on the very next play when Nott attached himself to Tom Geary's pass intended for McVean and raced 55 yards over the goal line for the final touchdown.

Tom Finn, Tom Oliver and a string of other substitute backs vainly tried to puncture the Detroit line in an attempt to score as the game ticked away.

$20,000 Increase in Winter Tourney's Prize Money Indicates Golf Upturn

$75,000 Set Aside for 25 Events

New Code of Rules for Pros Is Adopted at Meeting Here.

Plan to Qualify Open King Automatically in P. G. A. Favored.

PROFESSIONAL golf is definitely on the upgrade and the boom days are back again, George Jacobus, national P. G. A. president, stated last night at a special meeting of the association, announcing that more than $75,000 had been subscribed by various cities for the promotion of 25 tournaments during the 1933-34 winter golf campaign.

This amount, Jacobus declared, is $20,000 above last year's sum.

Sixty pros, here for the National Capital Open championship, some 40 of whom are nationally known, attended the meeting, which was in sharp contrast to last year's stormy session down in Florida. Harmony proved the keynote, as a new code of rules was adopted, all for the betterment of professional golf, according to Jacobus. The contents of the code, however, were not divulged.

Automatic Qualification.

A suggestion that the National Open champion, provided he be a pro, automatically qualify for a National P. G. A. tournament, was made by Billy Burke, 1931 Open ruler, and received the hearty indorsement of pros and officials. Jacobus indicated that the proposal would be written into the books at the annual meeting late this month, effective next year.

Dates and plans for the 1934 P. G. A. championship were discussed. Although officials would not commit themselves, it was rumored that the tournament would be held around Philadelphia.

Mons. J. F. Boehn, manager of the Kenwood clubhouse, was galloping frantically about the dining room shortly after noon yesterday, looking for additional supplies of roast beef and apple pie to serve hungry golfers in the National Capital Open.

"In all my years as a caterer I have never seen anything like it," wailed Mons. Bohen, taking time out to dampen the crying towel. "Mark you, I have never seen anything like the unprecedented demand for hot roast beef sandwiches—and I was at Chevy Chase seven years before I came here.

"And apple pie! Do you know that we started this morning with 36 big, luscious, homemade apple pies—and now we haven't even so much as a crust left. They won't touch the pumpkin pies," he added indignantly, poking an inquiring finger into a piece of the delicacy under discussion. "They claim they're too soft for golfers—they want something more substantial."

Officials, semiofficials and nonofficials crunching about on the heavily gravelled walk surrounding the first tee annoyed the drivers-off no end.

Joe Kirkwood doesn't mind where the spectators stand when he is making a shot—but he likes 'em to stand still.

Many followed the Mehlhorn, Kirkwood, Guldahl pairing, confident they would see some fireworks from such a colorful gathering. Mehlhorn was the only one to disappoint—he didn't climb any trees.

Kirkwood obliged on the first hole, using his spoon on his second shot, which was within easy iron distance of the green. The ball traveled slightly to the left, but had a little fillip on the end which put it within 6 feet of the pin. The others used irons, but weren't as close as Kirkwood.

Incidentally, Kirkwood wore his overcoat all during the round, removing it before each shot.

Ralph Guldahl contributed his bit toward satisfying the gallery by starting with a 6. His second shot on the second hole lodged in a tree, was dropped with a two-stroke penalty for unplayable lie, and he took a 7. With the 6-7 start, Guldahl was counted out in the clubhouse, but sprang a surprise by marching in from the round with a 73 for the 18.

A large gallery was attracted to Johnny Farrell, but whether by his reputation or cerise sweater, no one knows.

Chubby Bill Flynn, an enterprising railroad man, was flitting about the clubhouse all afternoon persuading the boys to travel over his line to the Mid-South Open at Pinehurst, November 14-15. He hauled in a flock of passengers for his choo-choos—and directed 78 strangers to the beer counter.

By the time the last of the matches came back to the clubhouse, it was so dark the spectators couldn't have seen the scores on the board if the scorers had been able to see to chalk them up. In fact, you couldn's even see the scoreboard—without a flashlight.

Paul Runyan, the medalist, is a dead ringer for Tom Moore of the movies.

Several of the leaders were badly in need of haircuts—which they no doubt can afford, if they win the tournament.

Arlington vs. Warwick.

The Arlington Athletic Club will play the Warwicks' 150-pound team today on the Arlington Field at 3 p. m. Jack Hutchinson, former Alexandria High School full back, has been added to the Arlington back field.

Pegler

Admits His Advice to Keep Eyes on Line Was Bad; Has Turned Square.

By Westbrook Pegler.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11 (Spl.).—On and after this date, as far as I am concerned, the important party in a game of football at any given time is the young man who happens to have custody of that little brown, egg-shaped bag of wind. This is a change of policy in these dispatches. More correctly, it is a reversion back to my old, ignorant system of watching football games.

Like Mr. Roosevelt, I am willing to try anything once, and, like him again, if I find that an idea doesn't work I am just loose enough in my mind to admit that it was a punk idea and not go on trying to wish it into a big success.

So, a few years ago, having listened to my expert friends, the coaches, in their talk about the marvelous work of the guards and tackles and the blocking backs, and the shrewd intelligence with which the defensive team shifted from a 7-3-6-2 formation into a more compact 6-2-9-0 array, I asked some question and decided that up to then I never had really seen a football game at all.

Ignorance Not Exclusive.

All I had ever seen was just a lot of young boys arrayed in stooping attitudes for a few seconds, after which, at a prearranged signal, everybody fell down.

I do not think this ignorance was exclusive, because it was about that time that the boys in our set began to spend money on big, heavy field glasses, each barrel about the size of an imperial quart, with which we would peer down upon the action seeking the real, inmost significance of things. We could then turn to one another very knowingly and utter sophisticated cracks such as "They overshifted badly that time and the Number 3 back took out the defensive Number 2, allowing the Number 4 back to cut back in a slice off tackle."

Or maybe he cut himself a slice of cake. I just wouldn't know about that, and you may call me dumb after all my years of pretending to know what it is all about, but, anyway, I am the first of our set to give himself up and admit that it has all been a fake. I think there should be great rejoicing in heaven over one sinner's turning square.

Keep Eyes on Forwards.

About the time that I speak of there began to appear in the papers extraordinary appreciations of the work of the guards, followed very soon by apparently expert, but, I must say, very confusing instructions in the proper way to watch a football game. You were not to watch the man with the football, because in so doing you would certainly overlook the far more important work of other parties who opened the holes for him or the brilliant defense of those athletes on the other side who did not permit these parties to open any holes.

We finally came to the point of advising our readers to ignore the one with the football as though he weren't even present and the ball itself were merely an object which happened to bounce onto the scene out of the grand stand.

Well, nobody can say I didn't try to watch those damn guards and tackles and No. 6 backs.

Watched Wrong Player.

I have peered and peered by the hour for several seasons now But always the time I selected to center my attention on some guard would be the time he would have nothing to do but stand around and pull up his pants while the boy with the football was taking a long, spectacular hike for himself, or if it was the great blocking back that I was watching some one would come tearing in from the other side, knock him for a series of diminishing outside loops and smash the ball carrier flat on his spine for a loss of seven yards, after which the boys would have to punt.

Or, if this great blocking back wasn't knocked for a series of loops, as stated, the play on which I gave him my undivided attention would be one in which he would have no duties beyond those of a decoy. He would run off somewhere, avoiding bodily contact with every one else, and while I was watching him step off a little run for himself some one else would be moving through a hole and hiking 65 yards to a touchdown.

Watch Man With Ball.

My advice, now that I have got religion in this matter, is to watch the football and let the guards and tackles and all those numeral boys such as No. 1 and No. 3, and so forth amuse themselves as they will, because I have never yet caught them doing anything interesting, unless you think it amusing to see a couple of boys bump into each other and fall down with a distant thump.

Watch the man with the football and you see at least where the football goes and who took it there or what happened to stop him. That and the girls are about all any reasonable person could expect to get out of a football game anyway. In fact, I don't even pay much attention to the man with the football any more. I am concentrating on the football girls. What do I care where the football is going? What I want to know is where that little blonde in the mink coat is going.

Gallett, Waukesha, Wis., and Jimmy Hines, Timber Point, N. Y., had similar scores.

Horton Smith, the Joplin Ghost, defending champion, shot a 76, and got in the qualifying class by a margin of one shot. Smith, displaying a lack of coordination with his shots, had a 37-39—76.

The field was narrowed down to 66, with professional scores of 77 qualifying. The amateurs were completely outclassed by the paid clan, and last night only seven remained in the running. John Shorey, former District boy-wonder of golf, led the local simon-pure contingent with his 76. Other amateurs who will compete today are Art Lynch, winged foot, 75; Ernie Caldwell, Baltimore, 79; Chandler Harper, Portsmouth, Va., 77; Roger Peacock, 78; Joe Lynch, 78, and Martin F. McCarthy, 79. According to the tournament rules, five amateurs had to be eligible for the second day's play, regardless of whether they were over the professional limit.

Numerous nationally known stars were victims of the fairways and tricky greens. Cyril Walker, 1924 National Open king, and Johnny Farrell, 1928 open king, who beat out Bobby Jones by one shot in a stirring play-off, shot 78, and were relegated to the side lines. Other stars who failed were Phil Turnesa, Roland MacKenzie, former District amateur star now a Colorado pro, and John Golden, the stocky Connecticut pro.

Houghton Finishes Strong.

Houghton set the pace for the District golfers with his 38—35—73. Undaunted by a 5 on the short tenth hole, Houghton came back strong, finishing the last 3 holes in 3—3—3, two under par, his spectacular birdie on the home hole resulting from a great second shot and a 12-foot putt.

Runyan touched off his par-equalling blast with a sensational 40-foot putt from off the edge of the green on the second hole, scoring a birdie 3. Bunkered on the fourth, he came out spectacularly to get his par 4. On the fifth he exploded from a trap to within 3 feet of the pin for his par 3, parred the seventh, but overshot the short eighth green and the 418-yard ninth green to go over on each hole and finish the first nine with a 35.

Laying his mashie niblick third dead to the 531-yard thirteenth, Runyan scored a birdie 4. He played a really remarkable shot for his birdie 3 on the sixteenth punch-bowl hole. He hooked his second into a stump hole, and, playing from an awkward stance, propelled his niblick approach to within 2 feet of the hole. It was one of the day's greatest shots. This birdie enabled Runyan to finish even with par.

Speaking of Tennis . . .

THE Tennis Racket Manufacturers Association, meeting at the Mayflower Hotel in conjunction with other branches of the athletic goods manufacturers, has written into its code of fair competition under the NRA a section that will be of interest to tennis players throughout the country.

It is section 5 under article 2 and the substance of it is that no racket manufacturer shall make gifts of any kind to any tennis player either professional or amateur or charge them a lower price for merchandise than the price charged other customers of the same class, except that the first 20 men, 12 women, 6 juniors, 4 boys and 4 girls, ranking players as per the ranking list of the U. S. L. T. A., may be given free of charge tennis rackets, frames and restringing service.

Year of Deflation.

To the uninitiated this appears as a magnanimous gesture on the part of the racket manufacturers toward the top-flight players of the Nation. And at the same time those of this group view it as a blot upon the amateur status of players accepting rackets free of charge.

But to those who have had the first, second and third degrees and are brothers of In the Knowa fraternity, 1934 will be recorded as the year of the great deflation in racket giving if the manufacturers live up to their code.

For years not only the players mentioned in section 5 of article 2 have been receiving rackets free of charge, but leading players in nearly every city and hamlet throughout the country have been on what is known as the "free list." The number of free rackets they receive during the year depends upon their reputation as a player.

This particular section was not written into the code to enable those at the top of the men's, women's, juniors', boys', and girls' divisions to receive their rackets free of charge, but rather to limit it to this group and bring to an end an evil that has gotten out of control in the industry.

One of the largest concerns in the country that manufactures tennis rackets has been writing its final figures in red the past few seasons. This firm has a "free list" that reads like a Who's Who of Tennis.

The sporting goods code, like other codes under the NRA, is devised to increase business and the sale of goods. A clear insight into the purpose of those who formulated the particular code for racket manufacturers would show that they have in mind increasing the sale of tennis rackets rather than giving rackets free to a particular group who have not received that privilege heretofore.

Head of Advertising.

The man who has not yet taken his degrees might naturally inquire as to the reason for all of this racket giving. The reply is that it comes under the head of advertising. The manufacturer of the Whizbang and the Super Deluxe racket figures that if the champion or high-ranking player is seen using models of his output in tournaments a number of the gallery who are just so-so tennis players will insist upon a Whigbang or a Super Deluxe the next time they purchase a racket. They are smart, and they know the psychology of the American buying public.

The plan was a good one and it worked very well for a while. The manufacturers with a free list saw their models become popular and their volume increased by leaps and bounds. But also their free list began to increase in the same proportion. It started with giving a few rackets to the high ranking national players, but grew until nearly every player of importance in towns both large and small were getting their rackets free. At the beginning the players of national reputation received only a few rackets, now the number a high ranking player gets each year runs into dozens. This privilege, instead of being treated as such was abused by many tennis players. So the business of giving rackets turned into a "racket."

One of the rather conservative houses manufacturing rackets that does not go in for volume production has a very small free list, but listed among those few is one of the worst offenders of the tennis gentry. Regularly at the conclusion of each tournament he would sell three or four rackets, which had been given to him free, for one-third of their retail sale price in order to provide himself with spending money. As he was receiving that number in excess of those actually needed for each tournament, it was not bad for him.

Another manufacturer of tennis rackets receives free from the gut manufacturers from which they buy their tennis strings 10 per cent of the quantity of gut purchased during the year, this to be used in stringing the rackets of those on their free list.

Why, you ask, should anyone bother about who gets free rackets or how many they get; if the manufacturers want to do this, let them go ahead and do it. But the feeling is that the giving of free rackets is reflected upon the retail price to the buying public. That is, if so many rackets were not given away the manufacturers could charge less for the product. The manufacturers are the ones that do the giving, but the public pays for it.

Success of Tournament at Kenwood Augurs Well for District Chances for Securing National Open; Amateurs No Match for Pros—Tommy Armour.

By Dave Herman.

WASHINGTON golf devotees today are witnessing the climax of a two-day professional tournament that is almost the equivalent of a National Open championship. For three straight years, the Kenwood Golf and Country Club has been sponsoring the National Capital Open, an event that is a fixture on the District golf calendar, and one that is giving Washington Nation-wide publicity as a real golfing center.

One needs only to glance at the list of entries in the past National Open at North Shore and compare it with the field of stars entered in the National Capital classic to become convinced that there is very little difference. True, Johnny Goodman and Johnny Fischer, the amateur stars; Gene Sarazen, Leo Diegel and Olin Dutra are not with us at Kenwood, but there are enough other celebrities of the fairways present to make up for the missing stars.

At least a dozen nationally known professional golfers remarked yesterday during the first 18-hole round that the District tournament is being put on in a high-class manner, and were loud in their praise of the course and the hospitality. If Kenwood can please men like Tommy Armour, Craig Wood, Joe Kirkwood, Denny Shute, Johnny Golden, Phil Perkins, Willie MacFarlane, Bobby Cruickshank, Ralph Guldahl, Billie Burke, Johnny Farrell, Horton Smith, Jimmy Hines, Paul Runyan, Cyril Walker, the Espinosas and the Turnesas, Washington is certainly in line for a National Open championship, say within the next three years.

Last U. S. Open Here in 1921.

Twelve years have elapsed since Washington witnessed the spectacle of a National Open. Back in 1921, Columbia was host to the national classic—the first ever held here—and the tournament was a tremendous success. Long Jim Barnes won the championship, which also saw the budding into prominence of Bobby Jones, Gene Sarazen, and a flock of other young stars.

It is about time that golf-minded Washingtonians start the ball arolling in the direction of a National Open. There are several courses here that would delight the hearts of the premier shotmakers. We refer to layouts such as Chevy Chase, with its beautiful gently rolling fairways and fluffy traps; Congressional, with its scenic beauty and well-laid-out fairways, and Columbia, a course, where few—and the best have tried—have been able to break 70 in competitive rounds.

The real thing is not hard to get, if enough good, energetic workers are behind the movement. Yes, the time is ripe for a National Open in Washington. It is highly probable that Chevy Chase will be the scene some time next [illegible] of the international women's matches. Why not have Washington bid for the National Open the following season? This year's open is going to be held at Merion Cricket Club, in Philadelphia. Following the success of the 1932 National amateur at Five Farms, Baltimore's golf clubs are [illegible] this same site for a future National open.

In all fairness to Al Houghton, the Kenwood pro, we must admit that this year's National Capital Open would not have been a success had it not been for his valuable contact and untiring efforts. Houghton smoked up interest in the event at every professional tournament he attended. He had the pros keyed up to such a point that by the time they received their entry blanks they cheerfully sent in their names.

Tommy Armour, the Black Scot, who hopes to win back his American, British and Canadian Open crowns, doesn't think the amateurs are going to worry the pros in tournaments from now on.

"Johnny Goodman took the boys for a ride in the Open," the Scot declared, "but I don't think he's going to do it again."

"Goodman certainly had the God of Luck with him during the Open," Armour added. "He couldn't seem to miss a shot, but you won't find him shooting like that all the time."

Armour said that Goodman's loss in the Amateur at Kenwood in Cincinnati this year was no surprise. It just proved, according to Armour, that Goodman couldn't match sub-par golf in a match when the steam is being turned on by a veteran such as Chandler Egan.

And Goodman is far from being the best amateur in the country, in the opinion of Tommy. He doesn't have the shots that Amateur Champion George Dunlap possesses, Armour declares.

Referring to Dunlap, Armour had this to say:

"There's a boy who can keep a straight line and knows how to handle his shots. He was by far the best man in the field at Cincinnati and is not through winning championships. He executed some of the most remarkable shots I have ever seen in his semifinals and finals match and Marston never had a chance after that first hole."

Tommy maintains that the golfers of yesteryear would be easy pickings for the present day crop. With the exception of Harry Vardon, the great English player, Armour doesn't think much of the pros and amateurs who stormed over the fairways 15 or 20 years ago. And this includes, mind you, such notables as Jerry Travers, Walter Travis, and J. J. McDermott.

Armour is one of golf's immortals. There are few who can equal his masterful iron game. With large hands and steely wrists, Armour puts plenty of "bite" into every shot, and, on a day when he is in form, not one of his iron approaches will miss the emerald target.

"The secret of the success of so many young pros and amateurs of today," Armour states, "is that they have all mastered the swing, and are hitting the ball in the proverbial groove."

Wood Has Following

Craig Wood, the blond Deal, N. J., shotmaker, of All-American football appearance, is having his share of the gallery at Kenwood. The former Clarkson Tech athlete, now celebrating his tenth year as a golf pro, is not only one of the best looking and best built members of the paid clan, but dresses in such "Dapper Dannish" manner that Johnny Farrell is beginning to fear for his laurels.

For your information, last winter during the golfing gold rush Wood showed the boys how easy it was to finish in the money by winning some $6,000. Wood's amazing performances gave him three big Coast tournaments—the Los Angeles, Pasadena and San Francisco opens. And Wood came within four shots of taking down the National Open at North Shore. He placed no lower than eighth in 10 other tournaments and captured the Radium Springs championship.

After watching the New Jersey pro propel a few wooden and iron shots, it is easy to see why he was such a sensation during the 1932-33 campaign.

However, Wood, himself doesn't think he'll have the success this season that he had last year. Except for his third round he admits he didn't play well in the British Open, which he lost after a stirring playoff with his countryman, Denny Shute. That third round of Wood's was a masterpiece. He shot a 68, and a 68 card at St. Andrews, especially under pressure, is a marvelous exhibition.

Wood's two sixes on the first two holes proved too big a handicap in the playoff with Shute. The New Jersey pro said it put him on the defensive right off the bat, and he struggled hopelessly in an effort to catch the slim Philadelphian.

7 Opera Stars Appear in Two Recitals Today

Group to Sing on Post's Radio Program and at Walter Reed.

Music history was made in the Capital yesterday as seven stars of the International Opera Co. arrived to display their talents a week in advance of Washington's first popular-priced grand opera series.

Rehearsals will be held this morning for a concert to be broadcast from Station WMAL at 10 o'clock in connection with the Postilion, the Post's nightly news program, and for a recital to be given by the stars for the benefit of disabled war veterans in Walter Reed Hospital at 2 p. m.

Program for Radio.

For the radio audience tonight the opera singers will put on the air selections from the operas they will present in Washington Auditorium the week beginning Sunday, November 19. Giuseppe Martino-Rossi, barytone, who, suffering from a sinus infection, left New York against physician's orders, will sing excerpts from "Pagliacci," to be given on the opening night of the opera series, and parts of several other operas in which he is to perform, which include "Carmen," Monday, November 20; "Rigoletto," Wednesday night; "LaTraviata," Friday night, and "Aida," Saturday afternoon.

Heard also will be Carmela Ponselle, famed Metropolitan Opera Company mezzo soprano, who will reach the city today.

Others of the company who will sing for the broadcast and at the Walter Reed concert are Rosita Fordieri, contralto, formerly of the LaScala Opera Company, Milan; Ciro DeRitis, former Philadelphia Opera Company barytone and native Washingtonian; Lavinia Darve, soprano; Marie Olla, lyric soprano; Ugo Martinelli, lyric tenor; Elizabeth Girard, soprano, whose European studies were financed by the City of Dallas, Tex.

Walter Reed Program.

Popular and light classical numbers comprise the Walter Reed program. More than 500 patients of Walter Reed and Naval Hospitals are expected to attend, as well as a delegation from Almas Temple of Shriners, headed by Potentate Warren Grimes. Both concerts will be directed by Walter Grigatis, International Opera Co. associate conductor.

According to opera company officials, it will be the first time a group of well-known opera singers has appeared in concert a week prior to presentation of an opera series.

Continued heavy sale of seats The Post has reserved for its readers at half the opera company's prices was reported yesterday at the Stieff piano store, 1340 G street northwest.

Kindler's First Concert Treat For Students

Genial Conductor Delights Children, Grownups in Opening Program.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

There may be no royal road to knowledge, as the adage declares, but some of the roads are less arduous than others. No pleasanter way exists for the novice in music to acquire experience in the ways of an orchestra than to attend concerts designed expressly for children and—older children.

Particularly is this the case when the conductor is so genial and entertaining an expositor as Hans Kindler, who had his auditors in high good humor yesterday morning at the first students' concert of the season by the National Symphony Orchestra.

With such an opportunity available, there were far too many unoccupied seats in the Central High School Auditorium. In the National Symphony, Washington has a musical asset which will increase steadily in value with the years, provided it be given the care which its welfare requires. The growth of an orchestra, materially and artistically, depends upon the air and sunshine of public support, and the surest means of increasing popular interest is education of the rising generation in appreciation of orchestral music.

In his explanatory remarks, Dr. Kindler has the knack of imparting information without seeming to do so. When he touches upon technical matters, as, for example, the structure of the classic overture, he clothes them in similes apt and simple. His humor banishes the specter of didactic dullness and the process of learning becomes not only painless but also diverting. With such a guide, the most timorous can enter confidently the maze of instrumentation which a composer builds about his central idea.

The program included Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," four dances from Tschaikowski's "Nutcracker" suite, the familiar "Largo" of Handel, and the "Ride of the Valkyries," from "Die Walkure." As an interlude, players of the less familiar instruments demonstrated their range and tonal quality.

The tuba and the harp had the honor of solo numbers, Thomas Mullikin playing "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," to show how low the brass tone can dive, and Sylvia Meyer contributing Grandjany's arrangement of the Breton folksong, "Le Bon Petit Roi d'Yvetot," and "The Whirlwind," by Carlos Salzedo. Miss Meyer has an expert technique, and uses it with artistic finesse.

'Forty Hour's Devotion' Begins With High Mass

"The Forty Hours' Devotion" will begin in St. Mary's Catholic Church today at the 11 o'clock high mass. A special choir, under direction of Miss Eleanor Nugent, will sing. The opening will be featured by a procession of several hundred school children and acolytes marching before the Blessed Sacrament, which will be carried through the aisles of the church by the Rev. Thomas A. Rankin.

Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday at 7:30 p. m. the music will be under direction of Miss Ella Hill, assisted by Mrs. Robert F. Downham, Miss Christine West, and Mrs. F. X. Nugent. The Rev. David J. Connors, of the Catholic University, will deliver the discourses.

New Tax Deal For Education Urged by Zook

Realty Levy Insufficient, District Teachers Union Is Told.

A "new deal" for education through levying of new taxes and reorganization of local governments is imperative to restore the crippled school system of the Nation, Commissioner of Education George F. Zook told the District Teachers Union at its annual luncheon yesterday in Burlington Hotel.

Real estate taxation has proved itself insufficient to care for school systems, and new types of taxation must be found, he declared. To be successful, the school system of the future must be organized on a wider basis with schools as the center of city recreation and library facilities, he said.

Lack of vision of members of State Legislatures has been largely responsible for the handicaps of school systems, he asserted. To remedy this, he recommended organization of school districts on a larger basis, enabling more efficient operation. It will be necessary, he pointed out, to transfer education from a local to a State basis, so that the right kind of taxes and distribution of funds may be had.

Reviewing what is being done for school systems in foreign countries despite the depression, Mr. Zook said the United States can well afford to take an example from those abroad. The recovery program, he said, can not possibly help schools during the present year. It will be necessary, he added, for school officials and teachers to be patient before benefits can reach them.

Meanwhile, the people of the country must find local and state means before the depression, he concluded.

Guests at the luncheon included Henry Gilligan, Henry I. Quinn and Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, members of the Board of Education; John B. Colpoys, editor of the Trade Unionist and Assistant Superintendents of Schools Stephen E. Kramer and Robert L. Haycock.

Even Sun Can't Cut Capers, Too Many Reporters Looking

Astronomers Take Photos of Old Sol From All Over World.

Pasadena, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP).—The sun hardly can show a spot or a prominence these days without the earth finding out about it. And is its face red?

But like the motion picture luminaries, it may as well get used to it. Amateur and professional astronomers are being organized around the world as solar reporters to gather items for a bulletin to be issued from Zurich, Switzerland.

These reporters use light waves and it takes them only eight minutes to get a news flash from the sun.

"The new sun spot cycle just beginning affords us new opportunities to find what effects the spots have on the earth," said Dr. Seth B. Nicholson, of the Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson Observatory.

"When there is a great sun-spot activity the earth apparently is bombarded with tiny charged particles which play havoc with its magnetic field and sometimes disrupt telephone and telegraph service.

"But there is a 'time lag' of about a day which we have not explained to our satisfaction. With observers around the world so the sun will never be out of sight of at least some of us, we will be able to check accurately the appearance and disappearance of the spots, as well as 'prominences,' great eruptions which hurl enormous volumes of gas from the sun into space."

More than a score of observers already are at work, not only in this country and England, France, Italy, Switzerland, Australia and China, but in such far places as Beirut, Syria; Huancayo, Peru, and Apia, Samoa.

They are equipped with a device designed by Dr. George E. Hale, former director of Mount Wilson Observatory, which filters the blinding light through prisms so the sun can be observed with the naked eye. An attachment converts it into a spectroheliograph for taking pictures.

Prince Georges Schools Apply For Laborers

Improvement of Grounds Proposed for Jobless Relief Projects.

Seventee Prince Georges County schools have asked the county welfare board to furnish labor for beautification and improvement of the grounds.

The petitioning schools include Berwyn Heights, Takoma Park, Accokeek, Badin, Bowie, Brandywine, Brown, Columbia Park, Duckettsville, Forestville, Glenn Dale, Highland Park, Marlboro, Oxon Hill colored, Seat Pleasant, Suitland and Tippett.

Miss Charlotte Wilcox, county relief administrator, explained workers are paid from a public works grant.

Work for Unemployed.

The board hires unemployed men who are in destitute circumstances. The organization now uses the stagger system, to give all unemployed men on its list part-time work.

Approximately 15 projects have been started. Several projects await approval by the State relief superintendent and the State relief administrator.

Among the projects started are the opening and repairing of drains in the Linwood section of Bladensburg. The old mill race here will be opened to improve sanitary conditions.

At Laurel, Md., the unsanitary section known as "The Grove" is being drained and cleared. At the University of Maryland the board is planning a land-clearing, ditching, leveling and painting program for the horticultural department.

Riverdale Project Begun.

One of the more recent projects includes the improvement of the Mayhew road, which extends from Suitland, Md., to the Centerville-Camp Springs pike. Here 35 men have been given work.

A large municipal improvement program is under way at Riverdale. Funds for material and supervision of the work are furnished by the Riverdale town council.

Lanham has requested several men for the construction of two lateral roads leading from the Pennsylvania Railroad and connecting the Whitefield-Chapel road.

Bowie Legion Post Honored.

American Legion Post, No. 66, Bowie, Md., has been awarded a special citation for the "most distinguished service" in Maryland. The Bowie Post was third in the State reenrolling for 1934, their entire 1933 enrollment.

School Books Need Watching, Yaden Warns

Tells Junior Mechanics Historians Ignoring Stirring Stories.

Constant watch must be kept on the textbooks which go into the schools, particularly the histories, James G. Yaden, president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, warned members of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics at the Hamilton Hotel last night.

Some historians are leaving out the "soul-stirring" parts of our National story, and are giving the impression that the Revolution was a mistake, Mr. Yaden said.

James L. Wilmeth, National secretary of the order, expressed his opposition to "any Government which tears down churches and schools."

The future program of the organization was outlined by William S. Howe, national councilor. He lauded the work of the order in obtaining restrictions on immigration, and warned the members they must fight to keep these restrictions. He told the order to be vigilant to frustrate the demands of parochial schools for public school funds, and warned against foreign entanglements.

Charles H. Hild, past State councilor, recommended the present members of the district board be retained in office.

Vocal selections were rendered by Mrs. Thelma Hild LaDow and Frederick Denniston, jr., with Mrs. Dorothy R. Emery at the piano. The meeting was a dinner given by the State council of the District for the national council of the order.

Britons Honor War Dead in Chilly Fog

King Pays Silent Tribute In His Apartment.

London, No. 11 (AP).—A cold gray fog draped the Cenotaph as a mighty gathering of Britons, led by the Prince of Wales, paid tribute to the empire's war dead today.

King George, whose grave illness in 1928 was traced to just such weather as that of today, observed a period of silence in his private apartments at Buckingham Palace. Queen Mary watched the ceremony from her window as her eldest son deposited his father's wreath of poppies at the memorial.

After the ceremony at the Cenotaph many Britons visited Westminster Abbey, where a memorial service was conducted.

"Suicide Bridge" Claims Its 48th

Man Shoots Self on Death Span in Pasadena.

Pasadena, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP).—Pasadena's notorious "suicide bridge" over the Arroyo Seco—aided by a .45-caliber revolver—claimed its forty-eighth victim early today in the person of Gustave A. A policeman who visits the arroyo every morning in a grim search for suicides, found the body.

A card in Pederson's pocket read: "Notify my mother, Mrs. Anne Pederson, 1728 Pennsylvania avenue, Dequois, Pa."

Plaque Marks Maryland Trips Of Washington

Masons, Veterans Sponsor Ceremonies Held in Bladensburg.

Hundreds yesterday attended the unveiling of the George Washington plaque at Bladensburg, Md. The tablet commemorates the visits paid to Prince Georges County by Washington.

The ceremonies, sponsored by county Masonic lodges and the Snyder-Farmer Post, American Legion, began at Hyattsville. Three addresses were delivered at the Masonic Hall.

We can not bring back the past, but we can carve out a new future, said Charles C. Magruder, chairman of the county bicentennial committee erecting the tablet. He named and explained the 15 visits paid to the county by Washington.

The Masons were represented by Arthur L. Jackson, grand officer of the Grand Lodge of Maryland.

"Washington," he said, "did not lay the corner stone of the original Capitol in the capacity of a Mason, as is popularly believed. He laid it as President of the United States."

State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, representing the Legion, gave a view of "Washington as the Soldier."

Music was furnished by the Forte G. Meade Band.

The plaque is in the World War Memorial Cross triangle.

The veil was lifted by Bobbie Johnstone, 11, and Mildred Johnstone, 8, of Hyattsville. They were dressed as George and Martha Washington. The invocation was given by the Rev. Robert E. Lewis, rector of St. Luke's Church, Bladensburg.

The inscription on the tablets: "Bladensburg (named for Thomas Bladen, Governor of Maryland, 1742-'47) Brother George Washington, Martha Washington often here from 1751 to 1798. He 'lodged' here going to Georgetown, where, on March 30, 1791, Prince Georges County ceded most of the National Capitol. Scene of the Battle of Bladensburg, 1814. Brother Lafayette here 1824. Hubby's Pockets Not Immune To Wife's Search, Rules Court Cognizance Taken in Suit of Ineffectiveness as Hiding Place.

Atlanta, Nov. 11 (AP).—The Georgia Court of Appeals took judicial cognizance of the ineffectiveness of husband's pocket as a hiding place today.

The judgment upheld Thomas Superior Court in refusing to allow J. E. Smith, sr., to use a savings deposit of $1,000 in the name of his wife, as an offset against a note owed to the Bank of Thomasville.

Smith testified his wife knew nothing of the existence of the deposit but the court ruled:

"The answer does not allege that the pass book was concealed by the husband in some place that was inaccessible to the wife. He may have kept it in a bureau drawer at his residence or even in the pocket of his coat or trousers, and, by common report, such receptacles are not immune from the searches of inquisitive wives."

Methodists Pledged To 'Moral Politics'

State Leader Interprets Dr. Wilson's Statement.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 11 (AP).—Dr. Fred Chenault, chairman of the Virginia Methodist Board of Temperance and Social Service, said today Dr. Clarence True Wilson's recent statement that the "Methodist Church is getting out of politics must not be interpreted as meaning moral reform has no connection with political activity.

"Primarily, the business of the church is to change men and women, and they, in turn, will change society," Dr. Chenault said. "However, the social order depends upon political activity, and political activity must not be left merely to a small group who desire to run politics for selfish ends."

Dr. Wilson is executive secretary of the Methodist Board of Temperance and Morals. Dr. Chenault is pastor of a Methodist church in Danville. His statement was made from there today by long distance telephone.

Three Banks Plan Release Of $5,150,000

Payment of $1,850,000 of Commercial Dividend Starts Tomorrow.

Preparations are under way for a release of $5,150,000 to depositors in one closed and two restricted banks here.

Payment of $1,850,000 of this amount representing a second dividend of 30 per cent, to depositors of Commercial National Bank, in receivership since February 28, begins tomorrow. Preliminary steps for release of $2,500,000 in Franklin National Bank, restricted since the National moratorium, will be completed by the end of this week. Arrangements for making available $800,000 to depositors of Mount Vernon Savings Bank, also restricted since the National Bank holiday, are nearly half accomplished.

Following announcement by Comptroller of the Currency J. F. T. O'Connor of payment of a second dividend to creditors of Commercial National Bank beginning tomorrow, Robert C. Baldwin, receiver for that institution, yesterday presented plans for its disbursement.

The bank's doors will be open from 9 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon daily, except Saturday, when the hours will be from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m.

All creditors who have received their first dividend checks must produce receiver's certificates. Those who have not received their first dividend checks must present the orange-colored receipts issued when their claims were proved.

No dividend checks will be delivered unless the receiver's certificate is presented for indorsement of dividend or the orange-colored receipt is surrendered. A receipt prepared by the receiver for each dividend check is signed at the bank windows.

Receiver's certificates will be delivered with dividend checks to creditors surrendering the orange-colored receipts. Administrators, executors, guardians, receivers or trustees must furnish up-to-date copies of appointment.

While all available windows at the bank will be open to avoid congestion, it is requested that those who can conveniently do so, postpone claiming dividends for several days, as the checks can be obtained at any time.

Distribution of checks at this time includes all claims proved through October 31. Payment is made by checks of the Comptroller of the Currency only. Further filing of claims will be postponed until after November 27.

The latter part of this week Franklin National Bank will begin distribution to its depositors of forms of agreement to the merger of that institution with Washington Mechanics and Mount Vernon Savings Banks as the new Mechanics-Franklin Savings Bank.

Franklin Bank is computing interest on all interest-bearing accounts, with the exception of Christmas savings, up to the date of the national bank holiday.

While waivers representing 75 per cent of the unsecured deposits, consenting to the merger plan, must be obtained, bank officials anticipate a ready response as agreements representing 80 per cent had been received to an earlier plan of the bank to reopen independently.

In the meantime, sale of $200,000 additional stock by Washington Mechanics and Mount Vernon Savings Bank and procurement of waivers of deposits of the latter institution, incidental to the merger plan, are progressing rapidly.

Special Fare, Bus Transfer Charges Stay

System on Various Lines Will Continue After Trolley Merger.

Special fare and transfer charges in effect on various bus lines are to continue after December 1 when the Capital Transit Co. takes over the street car companies and inaugurates its so-called universal free transfer plan.

Formal announcement to this effect is expected from the Public Utilities Commission as soon as details of the transfer plan have been put on paper. Under the plan proposed by the company transfers will be issued free between all street car lines.

The only restrictions will be designed to prevent "loop riding, that is, using transfers so as to get two rides for one fare. Free transfers also are to be issued between street cars and busses where such transfers now are issued free. There is to be no distinction between car or bus lines of present two companies.

Special Rates Later.

Several bus lines have been developed by both the Capital Traction and the Washington Railway & Electric Co. These have been launched in response to demands for service from particular neighborhoods and special fare and transfer charges were approved at the time.

Whether these special rates should be continued has been under study by the commission. It had been suggested that the transportation system be treated as a whole with universal free transfers, regardless of the special conditions under which certain bus services were inaugurated.

For the time being, however, the commission has determined to let the special fares and transfer charges remain in effect.

Weekly Pass Plan.

The question of transfer privileges is expected to be simplified by the weekly pass plans of the Capital Transit Co. These already have been approved by the commission.

Display of a pass will entitle bearer to ride. One pass, to be sold at $1, would be good on all street car and bus lines where the fare now is 10 cents cash or a token. Another, for which the charge will be $1.25, would cover all bus and car lines, including those having special fare of not more than 10 cents cash or transfer charges.

Five employes were waiting on customers in Rubinstein's Market. Two colored men entered and drew revolvers. On threat of death, occupants of the store were warned to "Stand still!"

Brandishing their guns, the bandits attempted to herd the employes and patrons to a rear corner. David Rubinstein, 32, coproprietor of the store, seized a meat cleaver and advanced toward the gunmen.

As he raised the weapon one of the colored men fired. The shot struck Louis Rubinstein, 25, the former's brother. The cleaver, however, found its mark, and felled one of the robbers.

His companion fled. A crowd took up the chase, but was soon outdistanced. The younger Rubinstein was taken to Emergency Hospital. Two bullets pierced his arm and wrist.

Allocation by the Federal Relief Administration to the District of $48,000 worth of food, clothing, fuel and other commodities for distribution among the needy was asked by the Commissioners yesterday.

The request was made at the instance of Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator. The District already is receiving pork for distribution to the poor. The $48,000 worth of other commodities would be given in addition to previous grants from Federal funds.

What commodities will be given has not been made known to District officials. Whatever is given will be distributed in addition to what is issued at present to those on relief rolls, either in wages or money or food or clothing allowances. That is one of the conditions of Federal gifts to aid the poor.

It also has been decided to have the club incorporated. H. Winship Wheatley, jr., has been authorized to draw up the papers. Dr. Jacob Waldman, proprietor of the Waldman Building, Hyattsville, has offered the club space for headquarters.

Charity Meeting Called.

A meeting of all persons interested in charity work in Alexandria will be held at 7:30 p. m. tomorrow in the city council chamber, to decide whether to continue the Alexandria United Charities as an auxiliary to the present welfare department.

Store Masons Dine and Hear N. C. Turnage

Woodward & Lothrop Men of Builders Club Meet at Hotel.

Needham C. Turnage, grand pursuivant of the Grand Lodge, F. A. A. M., of the District of Columbia, past master of St. John's Lodge, No. 11, and United States commissioner here, was the principal speaker at the semiannual banquet of the Builders Club at the Raleigh Hotel last night.

The club, organized several years ago by I. E. Fronani, is composed of master masons who are employed at the Woodward & Lothrop department store.

James W. Marshall, assistant advertising manager of the store, was toastmaster. Others at the speakers' table were H. L. Richardson, president of the club; Clark M. Richards, vice president; Charles Haskins, secretary, and C. Gray, treasurer.

George N. Everett, vice president, and Max Fischer, treasurer, of the store firm also were present.

The entertainment, under direction of L. S. McCarthy, included Miss Belva Hoch, soprano solo; Miss Elizabeth Holder, contralto solo; Johnny Barnes, tap dancer and piano specialty numbers; George Haislip and Clarence Hurrell, members of the U. S. Army Band, who gave cornet and trombone music; H. Furr, cornetist; John Proctor and Paul Bowbeer, hill-billy music; the Old Montrose Quartet, including Earl Gordon, Frank Goebel, Cal Martin and Bill Capps. Raymond E. Rapp accompanied at the piano.

Armistice Day was celebrated by the sounding of Taps, after which the gathering sang war-time songs.

Mrs. Roosevelt Stops At Veterans' Party

World War veterans last night gave Mrs. Roosevelt an ovation when she stopped for a few minutes at the Veterans of Foreign Wars ball in Wardman Park after attending a Drama Guild performance at the hotel theater.

Mrs. Roosevelt was accompanied by Mrs. William H. Woodin, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury; Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Stewart, of New York, guests at the White House, and Miss Marguerite LeHand, secretary to the President.

Thousands Hear Hog-Callers In Competition at Auditorium

Winner of Contest Literally Carries Off Prize, One Live Pig.

Hog calls—long, eery things unknown to most city-bred Washingtonians—rang out last night in the Washington Auditorium as several thousand spectators watched a genuine hog-calling contest in which the winner took the piggie off the stage to the accompaniment of numerous squeals.

Five contestants, all with calling experience, ranging from North Carolina to the State of Washington, took their places before the microphone and attempted to rouse an unusually clean piggie from his lethargy in a cage on the platform. The audience enjoyed the wierd calls of piggie-e-e-e and selected as the winner by popular applause Robert Lewis, of 111 Anacostia road, Benning, who carried off the prize literally.

Lewis, formerly of Shelby, N. C., added the tunes of a mouth organ to his natural chords, but no one accused him of cribbing. The audience didn't seem to mind—or perhaps didn't know whether or not a mouth organ is a regular part of hog-calling equipment.

It was all part of the night's program of District Grocery Stores' Food Show, which continues through the week.

Boy Injured by Auto, Virginia Driver Held

Struck by an automobile as he played near his home, Harold Carlisle, 9, of 4000 Canal road northwest, was taken to Georgetown Hospital last night with severe lacerations and bruises on his face and body.

Police said he was hit by the machine of Henry B. Taylor, 22, of Lincolnia, Va. Taylor was charged with reckless driving and driving without a permit.

3 Girls, Man Held to Testify In Nalley Case

Police Hear Threats Made Against One Witness in Club Murder.

A night club hostess, two pretty waitresses and a 34-year-old clerk were held last night as witnesses to Tuesday's early morning shooting of Francis Joseph Nalley, reputed gambler, in the gay Wunder Bar Club, Tenth and U streets northwest.

Courtney Thomas, the 19-year-old hostess, was arrested by a deputy United States marshal, after it was learned she had been threatened with bodily harm because of her partial identification of Charles (Rags) Warring as the man who shot Nalley.

Millicent Gooch, 19, and Lucille Hughes, 19, both of 1219 Vermont avenue northwest, alleged companions of Nalley, were questioned yesterday by homicide squad detectives. Accompanied by James Joseph Noonan, 231 Channing street northeast, the girls were guests at Nalley's table, police said. Noonan surrendered at the advice of his attorney.

Miss Thomas was held under a $3,000 bond at the House of Detention. She was taken from her home, 1022 Park road northwest, after it was rumored she would be "put on the spot."

Police said Miss Thomas had been notified to testify "favorably—or else." She is said to have identified Warring at a police line-up, picking him from seven men. Later, at the District Morgue, she declared Warring "might have been" Nalley's assailant.

According to police, Miss Gooch, Miss Hughes and Noonan were with Nalley when three shots ended his life. Detectives said their stories would "prove invaluable."

Meanwhile, Warring is awaiting trial on charges of murder. Two alleged companions are free under $3,000 bonds. They also will be summoned as witnesses.

Nalley was shot twice in the chest and once in the heart. Police said the shooting followed an argument. A policeman at his bedside declared he muttered Warring's name.

Policeman Dismissed For Part in Robbery

Dismissal of Private John F. Patton from the police force was approved by the District Commissioners yesterday. Dismissal had been recommended by the Police Trial Board following Patton's sentence on a robbery charge. No appeal was taken from the board's recommendation.

Patton pleaded guilty to participation in the robbery of a gasoline station at Sixteenth and Taylor streets northeast, and was sentenced in the District Supreme Court last month to the penitentiary for a year and a day to two years. The filling station was held up last June by two colored men who were aided in their escape by Patton.

Inquest Ignores 3 Held in Murder

Coroner's Jury Probes Charles Jones' Death.

Although three men already are under indictment for the murder of Charles Jones, 32, alleged bootlegger, in an alley behind the Government Printing Office September 18, a coroner's jury late yesterday did not name his slayer or slayers.

At the conclusion of the inquest, which was one of the most unusual on record because it was held after the victim was buried and the principals indicted, it was pointed out that "Charles Jones was shot to death by a person or persons unknown."

Buford Findley, Michael Vigilucci and Max Peltz have been indicted. They are said by police to be the drivers of automobiles at the scene of the crime.

Their attorney, James O'Shea protested last night to Acting Coroner A. MacGruder MacDonald that the district attorney would not allow his clients to appear at the inquest.

Gunmen Rob Man, Take Him on Ride

Two Men Search Victim, Escape on Foot.

Two gunmen took Samuel Perry, proprietor of an auto laundry at 2312 Georgia avenue northwest, for "a ride' last night, after robbing him of $200 and a watch.

Perry told police he was preparing to close when two colored men entered. They drew guns, he said, and demanded money. Perry surrendered the contents of his cash drawer and wallet.

Perry's automobile was parked in front of the building. At gunpoint he was made to drive the bandits through a maze of alleys. After searching his pockets and removing a wrist watch, Perry said, the men ordered him to stop and escaped on foot.

Friends Give Blood For Injured Youth

Others Are Standing By to Aid Messenger.

Herman Staley, 21, messenger, continued his battle against death in Gallinger Hospital last night.

Injured in an automobile accident two weeks ago, the youth was said to be in a "critical condition" with a fighting chance to live. Three blood transfusions have been made. His fellow messengers in the Press Building Postal Telegraph office are standing by to offer additional blood.

George McMillan, 18, one of the first messengers to volunteer his aid, submitted a pint of blood. Staley's uncle and a cousin also contributed.

Home Example Attains Beauty In Furnishings

Post's Model Residence Contains Arrangement by F. W. Hetzel.

Furnishings of the living room and dining room of The Washington Post model home at 4517 Twenty-eighth street northwest, by Hutchison's, Inc., arranged under the personal supervision of F. W. Hetzel, manager of that corporation, are remarkable for their beauty.

To the right of the hall, one enters a spacious living room facing a fireplace of the Adams period. On one side of the fireplace there is a Georgian wing chair; on the other an English lounge chair. These two pieces are upholstered in a very unusual striped fabric of a woolen frieze.

To one side of the fireplace there is an antique reproduction Duncan Phyfe lyre table. Immediately to the side of this table there is a beautiful Sheraton secretary desk with marquetrie inlay, surmounted with an American eagle and two urn finials in antique brass, a genuine eighteenth century reproduction.

Sofa of Virginia Design.

On the other side of this room, along the wall, there is an authentic reproduction of a Virginia sofa, a replica of one furnished by a Grand Rapids concern for the Colonial Exposition of Mount Vernon, held in Paris. This is a solid mahogany sofa, with the top rail inlaid with marquetrie on rosewood. It is upholstered with an old Empire fabric in black, with little sprays of flowers. On each side of this sofa are small occasional tables. The tables are of a Sheraton design.

As you cross the threshold, facing to the front of the house, you may look into a semicircular bay window, which has a settee in the bay, flanked by small occasional tables, oval shaped, of rosewood, with marquetrie inlay. A little to one side of the bay there is a Pembrook table of solid mahogany, with a table lamp.

Next to this there is an occasional chair of a Sheraton reproduction, a small, comfortable chair upholstered in a genuine Italian antique velour.

Eighteenth Century Style.

In the far right corner, opposite the bay window, is a Knabe grand concert piano. There are several end and coffee tables in front and alongside of each upholstered chair and settee.

The entire ensemble is an early eighteenth century setting, combining the finest of our early American and English homes.

From the center hall you enter the dining room. This room is furnished with an eighteenth century Sheraton and Duncan Phyfe combined all-mahogany suite. The table of this group is a Duncan Phyfe double-lyre pedestal.

The chairs are of a Hepplewhite design upholstered in genuine haircloth. The sideboard as well as the china are true Sheraton reproductions.

There also is in one end of the room a cellarette equipped with old hobnail punch bottles and cocktail glasses. This piece matches the finish of the dining room suite. Over the buffet hangs an American Victory mirror.

Over the glass curtains are deep red valances with the tie-back drapes.

Metallic Paint Reduces Heat Given by Pipes

If it is desirable to reduce the amount of heat expended by basement pipes, the pipes should be painted with a metallic paint. To increase the amount of heat given off, use a wall paint of some light color.

Drying and Silver Leaf Hide Knots Under Paint

An effective way to kill knots in exposed wood is to draw as much of the sap as possible by holding a hot iron over the knot, scraping it, and then applying two coatings of gold or silver leaf over the knot before painting.

Model Home Exhibit Brings More Crowds

3,000 Already Have Seen Dwelling Presented by Lightbowns.

Few residential offerings have captured the public's admiration so completely as The Washington Post model home now exhibited at Foxhall road and P street northwest. Approximately 3,000 persons have visited this house, presented by Copper Lightbown & Son, during the brief time of its presentation.

The home, one of an original group of six, is open for inspection daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. Three homes in this offering already have been sold.

The homes, of English cottage type, are located on a ridge which descends to the Potomac River Valley at the west and at the east to the U. S. Government Foundry Branch Parkway. This location offers a quiet, suburban-like atmosphere, which is but 10 minutes from the White House.

The homes have a southern exposure and are set well back on terraced and landscaped lawns with a red-brick retaining wall.

Harmonious Treatment.

Front elevations have been given a varied but harmonious treatment with rich, red sand-finished colonial brick; sloping roof lines of vari-colored and sized slate, stained dormer windows framed in cypress, cream-colored stucco and quaint apple-green shutters. Heavy copper gutters, down spouts and flashings add to the beauty and permanence of the group.

Deep, inviting concrete porches with sturdy iron railings and heavy, rustic posts of Douglas fir, offer a real opportunity for pleasant relaxation. Long "steamer deck" lines are used for the first time in porch design on this type.

The corner home has a special separate vestibule entrance, with large double-screened porches on the side of the house, entered through double French doors off the dining room and the upstairs bedroom.

Living rooms have been planned to give the maximum of wall space possible in a well-balanced room.

A log-burning fireplace is the central feature of this room. With a simple dignified, colonial mantel; a one-inch black slate facing and a hearth of red and brown shaded tile, this is most effective.

Floor Treatment Told.

Oak floors have been hand scraped, machine buffed and given a special stainless treatment which preserves their beauty, with a little care, indefinitely.

A studio-size steel casement window facing the south floods this room with light and air. A heavy, brass stair rail with ornamental iron balustrades gives an unusual touch.

Woodwork is given a warm cream, satin finsh. All interior doors are six-panel colonial, with glass knobs and brass fittings. Window shades are heavy washable piquet.

A delicately rounded arch connects the living room with the dining room, well proportioned and typically colonial in decorative treatment with chair rail. Attractive scenic and burlap effect wallpaper, concealed radiation and colonial designed pewter-finish fixtures complete the above room.

In the kitchen a cheerful flower and lattice design of washable Sanitas adorns the walls. Colorful "A" grade Armstrong's linoleum cemented down to felt covers the floor. A complete Oxford cabinet unit supplies ample cupboard room, drawer space and broom closet. The 6-foot double drainboard sink faces a wide steel casement window with deep tile sill.

General Electric equipment is featured with a large G-E Monitor top refrigerator of most recent design with steel cabinet and porcelain finish. The G-E Hotpoint electric range is completely automatic and keeps the kitchen cool and clean.

An electric ventilating fan is used which will displace 800 cubic feet of air a minute—a joy in hot weather. Double electric plugs are placed in a handy location. A G-E electric clock is on the wall.

All electric equipment is handled by special power meter giving the consumer a low commercial cost rate.

To reach the home, take the Foxhall Village bus, get off at Foxhall road and walk two blocks south to P street. It also may be reached by taking the Glen Echo street car to Foxhall road and walking one block north to P street.

Draperies Put In Model Home Please Many

Much Favorable Comment Evoked by Pretty Furnishings.

Much favorable comment has been caused by the draperies in the latest Washington Post model home at 4517 Twenty-eighth street northwest. They are arranged by Thomas T. Johnson.

The decoration by Mr. Johnson is tasteful and distinctive. The hallway is in the popular scenic paper suitable to this type of house and its sylvan surroundings. Hallway drapes have been selected carefully to blend with the color scheme.

Chandeliers, drapes and wall decoration have been carried out according to a unified plan. The living and dining rooms have antique, ivory backgrounds, with two-tone cornices and unusual crystal chandeliers. The dining room decoration is most suitable to English interiors.

Draperies Soften Sunlight.

In the living room there are wide brackets of English brass, and the alcove's sunlight can be softened by drapes. The library selection includes homespun drapes and rustic chandelier in harmony with the study type and its frieze depicts a German hunting scene, a replica of an old print.

Downstairs drapes are suspended from traverses and substitute for window shades. The clubroom with its high ceilings and paneled walls is done in four different shades of tan with heavy red and blue antique cornice. This blends with real moire damask drapes, forming an unusually pretty treatment for arched windows.

The upstairs decorative plan is executed with careful selections as to respective values. The master bedroom will be admired greatly for its new and unusual paper, marking the first use of paneling of this decorative nature in the city. The drapes are ruffled, silk tissue blending with the papered background.

Early American Room.

The guest bedroom is slightly more elegant, with its full-length blue taffeta drapes to the floor. All drapes have been lined to protect them against sunlight and to give them a uniform external appearance.

There is an early American room in curly maple, the window shades of which are simply treated. In the mahogany bedroom there are blue-figured glazed chintz drapes hanging straight from the ceiling. This makes this room unique in its simplicity. The spreads have been made in the same material as the drapes.

The French doors of the first floor are treated with silk brisbia of three-quarter length. These hang loosely with a festoon treatment. They are embellished with a center filet medallion and are edged and weighted by silk tassels. The dining-room drapes are in antique satin of cedar hue.

Land Bargain Cost 'Har Off Hys Head'

But Marblehead Pioneer Got Lot at Half Price.

In the early days of our country interesting real estate transactions were consummated, but, according to those who have wandered through pages of our ancient history, there was no deal more interesting than that in which a builder paid with his hair part of the cost of his land.

John Gatchel was the man and he lived in Marblehead, Mass. In 1637 he built on town land and he was fined 10 shillings for doing so. But if he should "cut of ye long har off hys head," half of the fine should be abated and the site granted.

He did so and the deal was closed at half the price.

Price of Homes Being Reduced By Firm Here

Realty Associates Seek to Close Out Units on Colorado Avenue.

Important among real estate news of the week is the announcement that Realty Associates, Inc., is taking over the operation built by H. L. Thornton and reducing prices on its units to $7,750.

They are offered to close out before winter officially opens, and easy terms are submitted to responsible buyers. Prices have been cut to make quick sales. This offering is featured by 5735 Colorado avenue northwest.

Buyers are offered the choice of the better northwest residential environment, on beautiful Colorado avenue, in that select, convenient section just north of Fourteenth and Kennedy streets.

This value can not be duplicated again, it is said, with prices advancing and choice residential sites becoming more and more at a premium. These are beautiful, complete, six and seven room homes, with the very latest 1933 features and equipment, including recreation room.

An inspection is invited today. To visit them, drive out Sixteenth street to Montague, then turn right to the houses.

Lot Market Revival Believed Pending

During the last three years activity in the suburban house market has superseded activity in the lot market. The time is ripe for a revival of the latter, in the opinion of Frank Cryan, vice president of Brady, Cryan & Coleran, Inc., developers of Massapequa Park, L. I.

"Since 1930," he declared, "investors have been extremely practical, and if they bought property for other than personal use, bought with the intention of deriving an income therefrom. The gradual lifting of the depression clouds and re-employment of thousands of persons have brought back the small type of investor who can not afford to purchase building, but wants to be a property owner."

Ancient Rome Limited Buildings to 6 Stories

Augustus, first Emperor of Rome, limited the height of buildings along the public streets to 70 feet, or six stories, because he feared structures could not be safely built high. Attempts to build higher than six stories, it is understood, resulted in disaster.

Many Inspect Colonial Type Model Home

Dwelling in Westmoreland Hills Has Antiques, Reprdouctions.

In spite of cloudy skies and wintry breezes, scores of persons inspected the new Westmoreland Hills model home which was opened to the public for the first time last Sunday.

The home is a colonial type, of brick and clapboard construction, insulated, with four inches of rock wool to assure fuel ecenomy in winter and cool comfort in summer.

It is substantially built throughout, has a slate roof, copper guttering and other features that will "keep the upkeep down."

The Westmoreland Hills model home is completely furnished with antiques and authentic reproductions of early American furniture. Those interested in the application of antiques to modern interior decorateing will particularly enjoy their visit to this new home.

Fine old elms, oaks and beech trees literally surround the Westmoreland Hills model home, which overlooks Delacarlia Park and the densely wooded hills of this new community. The site upon which the home was built is generous in size, having 75 feet of frontage on a winding street, just a few blocks from Massachusetts avenue, at Westmoreland Circle.

One feature of Westmoreland Hills that appeals especially to parents is that their children will always be able to play in safety in spacious yards, gardens and woods. Traffic will never be heavy over the winding, tree-sheltered drives of this new comunity which is a grateful relief from dangerous city streets.

Because of sensible racial and architectural restrictions, those who build in Westmoreland Hills are forever protected from value-destroying infringements. Plans for all homes must be approved by a board of architects, so that every home will be in complete harmony with its surroundings. This does not mean that only homes of the more expensive type can be erected.

On the contrary, it has been proved that architectural harmony is not a matter of cost. A home costing only $10,000 can be built beside one in the $35,000 class without affecting the value or desirability of the more expensive home in any way.

The model home will be open throughout today and many visitors are expected. To reach it, drive out Massachusetts avenue to Westmoreland Circle at the District Line. Entrance to Westmoreland Hills is on the circle.

Many Visit Home In Meadowbrook

gestion that in the corporation's advertising stress should be laid on the fact that it gives real value.

This purchaser, Mr. Dawson said, spent eight months looking for a detached house before he brought in Meadowbrook. He consumed much time and used care because this was to be his final home selection.

In his decision the location of the home and its environment were highly important factors.

"At Meadowbrook," said Mr. Dawson, "you are assured of a careful selection of neighbors because Meadowbrook, Inc., designs and builds each home and selects each purchaser. No other builder can buy a lot or build in Meadowbrook."

The furnishing of this home now presented is particularly beautiful.

In the hall to the right is a Duncan Phyfe mahogany console table with a Chippendale mirror and American Oriental rugs. In the corner is a telephone stand and stool. To the left is a living room, furnished with a Charles of London sofa and chair covered in a green tapestry with a floral design. The secretary desk is of Sheraton design in mahogany with a beautiful rush-seat Queen Ann chair to match.

The little mahogany end table with the inlaid top of octagon design is very attractive, serving as a lamp table which accommodates a beautiful Empire pottery lamp. The floor and bridge lamps are in keeping with the furnishings. The Lazy model radio serving as an end table is the latest model, and the little mahogany nest of tables with the American Oriental rug fits in to complete the room.

To the right, off the living room, is a beautiful ten-piece, solid mahogany Sheridan dining room group, consisting of turn top server, buffet, Duncan Phyfe pedestal table and six chairs upholstered in genuine blue hair cloth. There is an oval mirror over the buffet. The American Oriental rug adds to the beauty of the room.

Up one flight of stairs, halfway to the second floor, is a studio room, beautifully furnished with a studio couch in tapestry, high back maple chair, solid maple chest with maple bridge lamp, coffee table, smoking stand and end trough, all early American creations. The floor is covered with a room-size imported hooked rug that makes this a very attractive studio room.

Beautifully Furnished.

The first room to the right on the second floor is beautifully furnished with a solid mahogany, pineapple poster bed, and block front dresser and mirror, also of mahogany. Beside the bed, is a lovely drop leaf Duncan Phyfe pedestal night table with a rush-seat, Queen Ann chair and imported hooked rug of beautiful design in keeping with the furnishings.

The double bedroom is furnished with a beautiful, solid mahogany early American group, consisting of panel bed, dresser, base with hanging mirror, large chest of drawers, small night chest, a hooked rug and boudoir chair that gives a true colonial atmosphere.

The master bedroom to the left of the second floor hall is a spacious room furnished with a mahogany seven-piece bedroom group, consisting of twin beds, dresser, chest, vanity, night table and stool. The boudoir chair and hooked rug are carried out in a scheme that matches the drapes beautifully. Along with this is a twin bed lamp in green and ivory that also matches the scheme.

In cooperation with Story & Co. the James J. Lampton Co. last week sold to John Crosby, of New York, well known in financial circles, the beautiful estate of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Porter Davidson, of Washington and Pinehurst, N. C.

This property, consisting of a handsome 20-room brick and frame dwelling on a seven-acre tract, adorned with stately forest trees and beautifully landscaped, is located on Davidson drive, just west of Wisconsin avenue and opposite the Chevy Chase Country Club property.

Mr. Crosby is making extensive alterations to this residence, which he will make his Washington home. He is now living there.

The West Side of New York City as a resident place is preferred by a number of persons well known in literary, science, amusement and business, said Russell B. Corey president of the Central Park West and Columbus Avenue Association. Among those who live on the West Side and have lived there for years are, he said, Dr. Roy Chapman Andrews, Fannie Hurst, Rex Cole, David Warfield, Mrs. Donald Brian and Carolyn Bathelmess.

Appraisal Board Helps City Owners

During the fiscal year just ended more than $3,000,000 of real estate was appraised by the Washington Real Estate Board's appraisal committee, which appraisals covered 73 parcels of land. Included among these were apartments, business properties as well as a considerable number of industrial properties and a large assortment of miscellaneous properties embraced in the holdings of several estates.

Most of these appraisals were requested by attorneys, banks, trust companies, executors and administrators of estates for use in the settlement of estates, liquidation of real estate holdings, adjustment of capial assets, income and inheritance tax cases, determining sale prices and other equity court proceedings.

At the organization meeting of the board of directors October 18 the following were appointed to serve as the appraisal committee for the present year: Clarence Dodge, William R. Ellis, Vernon G. Owen, Homer Phillips, James McDonald Shea, Charles H. Thompkins and Curtis Walker. Mr. Tomkins was elected chairman and Mr. Shea vice chairman at the first meeting of the committee.

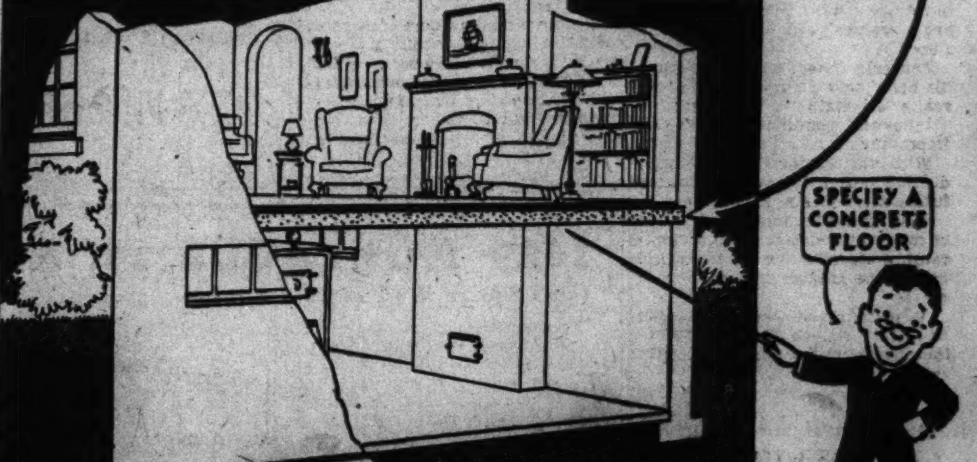
The FUTURE of your house depends on what you do right here



THERE'S a whole lot more to a first floor than the part you see and walk on. It should be part of the foundation itself—solid, stable, long lasting.
Specify a concrete first floor in your new house. It can't burn. It stops the spread of basement blazes—don't forget that a lot of residence fires start in basements. It's impervious to basement dust and odors—deadens noises. Concrete is permanent; stops termites and other wood-boring insects. And a properly built concrete first floor can't sag. Hence it helps to prevent unsightly plaster cracks and sticking doors or windows.
You can finish a concrete floor any way you want: with beautiful colored concrete—or cover it with tile, linoleum or hardwood flooring.
You will like a concrete first floor—because of its safety, comfort, and economy. Write us today for a copy of our free booklet.

Model Home Handy Shows Seen by 5,000

Garrison Street Dwelling Remains Open to Visitors Daily.

More than 5,000 interested visitors have inspected the model home being presented by Levin P. Handy. This exhibit house is the last of a group of five which sold rapidly.

The display dwelling, known as the 1933 furnished model home at 3412 Garrison street northwest, is still open for inspection daily until 9 p. m. The rapidity with which this group moved indicates its high quality.

The home is furnished by Hutchison's, Inc., and the draperies are by John F. Ligon. To visit the house, drive out Connecticut avenue to Fessendon street northwest, turn right one square to Thirty-fourth street and north one square to Garrison street.

Furnishings Described.

The living room is furnished with a Charles of London sofa and chair to match. Both pieces are covered with a fine grade of green tapestry. In contrast to the green suite you will find a fireside wing chair, covered in gold damask and of solid mahogany.

One finds a Duncan Phyfe tilt-top table in solid mahogany, bound in satin wood; also a solid walnut coffee table by Duncan Phyfe. A secretary desk of Gov. Winthrop period and mahogany is in the center of the room. The radio is of the latest type Philco model with remote control.

There are several novelty end tables worthy of notice, as well as an assortment of lamps. Over the mantel there is an American Victory mirror which is a replica of a convex mirror given to George Washington by his soldiers. The rugs are domestic Oriental of deep rose.

In the dining room there is a beautiful mahogany suite, consisting of a Duncan Phyfe table, chairs with blue haircloth seats, a Sheraton buffet with a tilt-top server to match. Over the buffet hangs a round Venetian mirror with a beautiful scroll frame in gold. The rug is a domestic Oriental of Persian design.

Bedrooms Finely Furnished.

The master bedroom contains a handsome six-piece twin-bed suite, finished in walnut. There are a bureau, vanity dressing table and bench. The floor is covered with handsome hooked rugs of shade and color to match the general color scheme of the draperies.

The guest room contains a five-piece curly maple suite, consisting of a double bed, dresser and chest of drawers. The rugs are oval and of colonial, woven chenille, corresponding with the draperies and general color scheme. The lamps are of hobnail type with parchment shades trimmed with blue tassels.

The third bedroom is a colonial reproduction in mahogany, consisting of a four-piece solid suite. There are a four-poster bed with open-end footboard, a lowboy of the kneehold type, with a Chippendale mirror hanging over it and a tall, narrow chest with a portable mirror on top.

Revival of Prices Seen in Five Years

Four Reasons Given for Return to Normal Level.

John A. Zangerle, auditor of Cuyahoga County (Cleveland), Ohio, said that fundamental factors were at work reviving realty values after the most drastic fall ever recorded in history. Within the space of five years values will have been restored.

Zangerle listed four reasons for his belief in a future upturn of the real estate market. They were:

Industrial conditions are rapidly improving.

With our surplus industrial production capacity, capital in the near future must seek new outlets.

With industry improving, prices of material and labor will increase, causing reproductive costs of buildings to be greater and rents to increase.

A plethora of capital will undoubtedly reduce the interest rate, thereby increasing the capitalization rate.

Assessment Volume For 1933-1934 Ready

The Washington Real Estate Board's office has been advised by the publisher that the first volume of the assessment books for 1933-1934 is ready for distribution.

The board's office has been informed that the cost for the full set will be $72.

tric kitchens of the General Electric Co.'s research department.

G-E kitchens give greater convenience and save time and money. The large G-E refrigerator with its four-year guarantee against failure of mechanism, is of modern design, with a steel cabinet, porcelain finished with chromium-plated hardware.

Its quiet, dependable operation keeps food at the proper temperature, prevents spoilage, provides quick freezing with temperature control and offers the lowest cost refrigeration service. The G-E Hotpoint electric range eliminates all guess work, uncertain heat and hit-or-miss methods of cooking.

Electric cookery is clean, cool, economical, quick and brings to the housewife many leisure hours. This range has three burners, thrift cooker and roomy oven with temperature control. The thrift cooker is a 5-quart aluminum cooking vessel with ample capacity for a meal for the entire family. Vegetables, meat and dessert all can be prepared at one time without the mingling of flavors or odors.

The thrift cooker is efficient for boiling, brazing, pot-roasting, steaming and the preparation of soups. Watching, waiting, testing and tasting are no longer necessary. You simply place your food in the cooker and turn on the heat. Three definite cooking temperatures in exactly the proper amount give controlled economical cooking. Electric heat is as clean as electric light.

On the second floor are three attractive bedrooms and two tile baths with built-in fixtures. Each room has a spacious wardrobe closet and there are additional closets in the hall. The attic offers plenty of storage space. In the basement is a completely finished knotty pine recreation room with open fireplace and a service room with servants' toilet, laundry trays and oil burner.

The colonial motif is carried out in the interior decoration, lighting fixtures and furnishings providing an ensemble in harmony with the period of this home. Insulation, screens, weatherstripping, copper gutters and downspouting and a host of other features show the care of the builder in giving proper consideration to every detail of construction.

Westmoreland Hills, which is being developed by the Loughborough Development Corporation, embodies all sound restrictions for architectural and social control to enhance the joy of living in this beautiful restricted new home community. The model home on Abingdon road is reached by driving out Massachusetts avenue to Westmoreland Circle. The entrance to the development is on the circle and signs lead directly to the home.

Unusual Rugs Help Beautify Model Home

Glamour and Dignity Lent to Rooms by Splendid Furnishings.

Manoukian Bros., importers, interpreters and appraisers of Oriental weaves, have furnished The Washington Post model home at 4517 Twenty-eighth street northwest with rugs of unusual beauty and quality.

At the entrance door you will find a semiantique Serebend with Oriental palm leaf designs, which is supposed to bring good luck to the owner.

A sense of glamour is given to the hallway by the mellow tones of an antique Beshir Boukhara of unusual texture and workmanship. Boukharas are made in Turkestan, where the people express their nomadic life in the beautiful designs significant of their tribes.

Great dignity is given to the library by a semiantique Princess Boukhara, which is the richest and finest type of the Boukhara family. A rich effect has been acquired in the dining room by placing an antique Serapi there, which is a museum piece. Its artistic Oriental design and subdued blending of colors lend to the harmony of the home.

The beautiful shades of the one-piece Kandahar rug in the living room serve to enhance the delicate color scheme of the building.

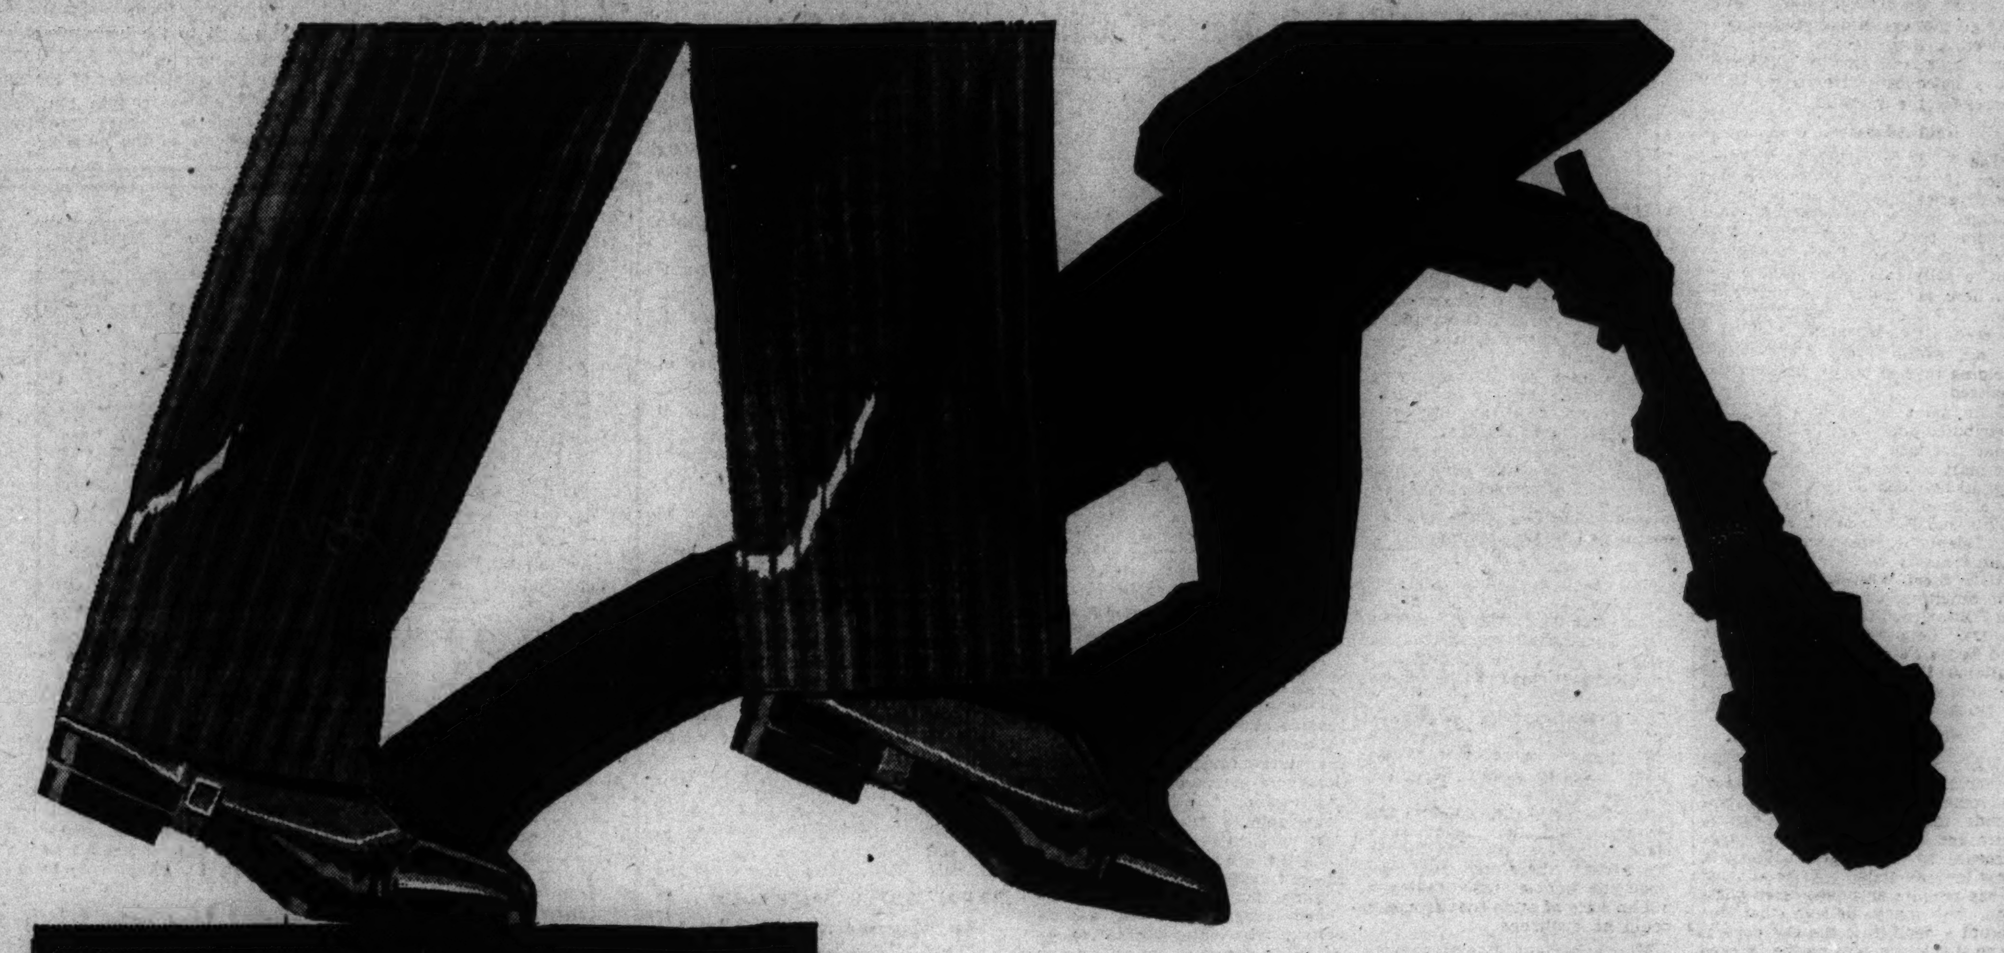
Suit Attacks Zoning Rules

Residence Property Lost, Owner Claims, Asking Reclassification.

Claiming he had lost his property through a tax sale because he was unable to rent it profitably as residential property, Victor Sadd, 1612 Twentieth street northwest, yesterday applied to District Supreme Court for a mandatory decree changing the zoning regulations governing the neighborhood.

Sadd's property faces Connecticut avenue, and that boulevard is now such a busy thoroughfare that it is impossible, he said, to rent his property as a residence. Because of the reduced income, he said, the District sold his property in January.

He asked that the District and the Zoning Commission be directed to change his classification to commercial so he can obtain an income from it and retrieve it from the tax sale purchaser.



TREAD LIGHTLY -but carry a big stick
—Theodore Roosevelt

A code for Advertising and Selling has under the National Industrial Recovery Act become law. Violation of the sections of that code becomes an offense. False and misleading advertising will not be tolerated.

So the Better Business Bureau—a civic organization maintained for the protection of the public and legitimate business—has a big stick.

No higher compliment can be paid to you, Mr. Merchant, than that you yourself gave the Government this big stick. This Code of Fair Practice was drafted and recommended by the merchants of the country because of reckless and unfair cat and dog fight competition which has been injuring public confidence and increasing the costs of doing business, to say nothing of actual deceit to the individual buyer.

The effectiveness of this Code depends partially on you. The public and the merchant alike are urged to report violation of the Code to the Better Business Bureau for prompt and impartial investigation.

Stocks Renew Advances on Active Issues

Gains Widely Distributed as Sales Drop to 472,180 Shares.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—Stocks finished a busier week with a rally today.

With grain markets closed and Paris and London security exchanges also suspended for observance of Armistice Day, share traders paid little attention to their own market.

Early quotations were mixed and mostly narrow; such reaction as occurred was doubtless in sympathy with the dollar's advance. When foreign moneys braced, reducing or canceling their losses, stocks also came back and activity quickened. Sales, however, totaled only 472,180 shares for the morning.

Gold Advanced Again.

The R. F. C. jacked up its gold price 12 cents to $33.32, and the world price also was advanced, although on the basis of sterling's London opening the Washington level was higher. Pound rates began to rally soon after trading began here, and much of its initial decline of 7 cents was eventually recovered. It closed at $5.10, off half a cent, while French francs, after yielding several points, finished unchanged.

Late gains in stocks were well distributed and net advances ranged from fractions to around 2 points for most of the active issues. Mining issues looked fairly vigorous, U. S. Smelting rising more than 3 points and Patino about 2. American Telephone, after some hesitancy, gained nearly 2.

U. S. Steel, Westinghouse, American Smelting, Chrysler, Harvester, Du Pont, Union Carbide, New York Central, Celanese, Cerro de Pasco and Santa Fe improved 1 or more. National Distillers jumped around 3 points and Western Union almost as much.

Street Seems Cheerful.

Wall street sentiment seemed rather cheerful as the week ended. In some circles it was felt that trends for the immediate future were apt to be influenced in large measure by exchange fluctuations. How low the dollar is to be allowed to sag remains an unanswered question, but many believe that too abrupt a decline, if the currency is to go still lower, will not be favored in Washington.

Although major trade indices reflect a further contraction in business, some comfort is derived from the smaller decreases. Seasonal influences will soon have run their course and with Government-sponsored projects assuming more important proportions a pick-up for some important lines, such as steel, would seem logical.

Building construction is maintaining its upswing, October contracts representing the best total since May, 1932, and with that single exception the best in two years. Many observers see in this an important recovery indicator.

A Signal That Care Is Needed

Government Bond Decline and Capital Flight Reflect Fear

By Ralph West Robey.

Pronounced weakness in Government bonds simultaneously with a flight of capital from the country is the strongest prophecy of impending trouble that financial markets can give. In fact, either of these events alone always indicates a major disturbance in our economic system, or at least fear of one. When they come together, especially with such vigor as in the last few days, it is a forecast which must not be ignored by those responsible for our financial policies. Then, it no longer is a reflection simply of not trusting what is happening, or of a belief that it will not be successful, or even of a conviction that in the long run the policy will result in further setbacks. Rather, it is an indication of the gravest fears for the future of our financial system and capital structure.

Obviously this does not mean that these fears are justified. They may be based upon a misinterpretation of the available facts and of the force of the underlying factors involved. Or, granting that the fears are justified by current developments, it may be that the present trend will be broken in time and that the anticipated troubles will not materialize. Or, finally, it may be that regardless of whether the fears are justified, those who have sold Government bonds and those who have transferred funds out of the country have jumped out of the frying pan into the fire. At the moment, however, all of these considerations are secondary. The important thing now is to rectify the conditions which have given rise to such a portent of disaster.

Speculative Selling Probably Contributed to the Decline.

This is true even though the actual declines in Government bonds and the value of the dollar in the foreign exchange markets were aggravated by speculative selling. As a matter of fact it is reasonable to assume that there was such selling and that without it the break in prices would have been somewhat less. At the same time it must be recognized that unless we had conditions which promised handsome profits from such activities by speculators the selling would not have taken place. Ultimate responsibility for the breaks, therefore, must rest upon the policies that created a public state of mind that so easily could be disturbed.

Most important of these policies has been our current monetary program. Almost simultaneusly with its adoption three weeks ago the bond market turned reactionary. Since then high grade bonds, especially those of the United States, have been losing ground. Until the middle of last week the drop was not spectacular, but there was a persistency in the decline that was disturbing to those trying to appraise the course of business in the next few months. Finally, last Wednesday and Thursday, the Government bond market "broke wide open." The break was continued Friday morning, with the volume of trading, unusually large, and then a rally started which carried into yesterday.

Flight of Capital Also the Result of Our Money Policy.

Almost simultaneously with the adoption of the new monetary program, too, the flight of capital from this country was renewed. Earlier, especially last spring and summer, when the indication of inflation was strong, there was a marked run from dollars into foreign currencies and securities, but more recently it had more or less died down to relatively insignificant proportions. With the swing of the Administration into foreign gold purchases, however, the flight started again. On Thursday, according to observers in the New York financial district, foreign currencies were purchased with an abandon perhaps not equaled in this country since the outbreak of the war.

This monetary program, however, is only the immediate cause for the evident lack of confidence in Government bonds and in the future of the dollar. Back of it is the spending program of the Administration, the entry of the Government into price fixing, the obvious lack of, or at least limited, success of much of the recovery program, and the apparent decision of Washington that it is justified in going to any length in order to raise prices.

All of these policies and views now are in serious need of being reappraised from the point of view of their effect upon Government credit. Unless this is done, and the necessary modifications made, it appears from the developments of the last week that it is only a matter of time until the Treasury will be unable to get funds through the ordinary channel for carrying on the recovery program. If such a time arrives, the only alternative to dropping the program will be to start the printing presses.

Investment Trusts Rise Substantially in Week

New York, Nov. 11.—Investment trust securities registered a substantial recovery during the past week. The average for the common stocks of the five leading management trusts, influenced by the leverage factor, as compiled by Allied-Distributors, Inc., stood at 13.55 as of November 10, compared with 12.85 on November 3. The low for the current year to date was 8.22 on March 31.

The average of the nonleverage stocks stood at 13.98 as of the close November 10, compared with 13.34 at the close on November 3. The average of the mutual funds closed at 10.29, compared with 10.16.

Road Bureau Employs 100,071 Men.

The number of men directly employed by the Bureau of Public Roads in its recovery highway program today had reached 100,071, as against about 33,000 two months ago.

British to Buy Turkeys From Canadian Farms

Montreal, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—One million pounds of the finest Canadian turkey available will be exported to Britain for the Christmas trade.

Arrangements are being made through the Department of Agriculture here for the assembling, inspection and grading of the birds, to insure that the highest Canadian standards are maintained. While in London, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Canadian High Commissioner, is taking steps to see that the turkeys go on the market in the best condition.

Woman Raises 500 Turkeys.

Bedford, Va., Nov. 11 (Spl.). Mrs. Edward Wells has the largest flock of turkeys raised in this county this year, perhaps. Her flock of 500 Narragansetts was raised from eggs produced on her farm in the Bunker Hill community, and 200 birds are ready for the Thanksgiving market. Miss Hulda Martin, in the same communiy, has raised 68 turkeys this season, with the loss of only five from her flock.

Bond Market Is Unchanged; At 73.1 Level

Federal Issues Advance; Half-day Sales Total $6,371,000.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—While some support appeared today for recently depressed United States Government securities, the bond market, as a whole, was able to do little more than hold its own.

Sales totaled $6,371,000, par value, about the same as last Saturday, and the average for 60 domestic corporate issues was unchanged at 73.1. This average showed a loss of .6 of a point on the week.

Federal Bonds Up.

The Federal section rallied briskly in the first hour when the dollar came back substantially against leading foreign exchanges. Washington raised the price of gold 12 cents an ounce to $33.32, after London had boosted the rate 5½ pence, and the dollar lost its early advances.

Government loans also pared their extreme gains, but all of them finished up 2.32 to 29.32 of a point.

Corporate issues, as well as governments, continued largely to be influenced by the administration's monetary program, although indications that Washington had the dollar under control tended to discourage further extensive liquidation.

Recoveries of 1 Point.

Recoveries of fractions to around a point or more were registered by bonds of American Telpehone, Santa Fe, Baltimore & Ohio, Chesapeake Corp., Chesapeake & Ohio, Goodrich, N. Y. Edison, Philadelphia Electric, Standard Oils of New Jersey and New York, and Union Pacific.

There were similar declines, however, in loans of Western Electric, Utilities Power & Light, U. S. Rubber, United Drug, Southern Pacific, Pennsylvania Railway, Philadelphia Reading Coal & Iron, N. Y. Central, Erie, Delaware & Hudson, and American Smelting.

The foreign division was dull and a bit reactionary. Obligations of France, Dutch East Indies, Switzerland, Canada, Australia, Argentina and Great Britain sagged around 2 to 3 points.

Dollar Sinks Again After Brief Rally

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—Early weakness in foreign currencies today gave the dollar a short-lived rally, which was followed by a relapse as sterling and the gold monies recovered substantially all of their losses in the late trading.

In early dealings the pound was down 7 cents, while French francs yielded .08½ of a cent. Dutch guilders dropped nearly a cent and Swiss francs and Belgian belgas declined around ½ cent each.

The late reversal raised the sterling rate to $5.10, a decline of ½ cent from the previous day. Francs canceled their loss to close unchanged, and most of the other gold monies showed equally sharp recoveries. Scandinavian exchanges and Canadian dollars also finished higher.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—American Commercial Alcohol net profits for the quarter ended September 30 amounted to $85,404, equal to 32 cents a share, compared with $160,417, in the third quarter last year.

Chanter, president of the company, said that until recently prospects for the fourth quarter had been favorable, but that die and tool makers' strikes in the Detroit area had "seriously interfered with our plans for November and December and it now appears that our fourth quarter results may prove disappointing."

Japan Boosts Its Trade With Manchuria

Increased exports from Japan to Manchuria and the Kwantung Leased Territory during the first eight months of the current year more than offset the decline in shipments to China proper in that period, according to a report to the Commerce Department from Commercial Attache Frank S. Williams, Tokyo.

Japanese export trade with Manchuria and Kwantung during the eight-month period totaled 187,750,000 yen compared with 79,553,000 yen in the corresponding eight months of 1932, while exports to China and Hongkong totaled 84,688,000 yen against 93,543,000 yen in the 1932 period.

The largest increases in Japan's exports to Manchuria occurred in cotton textiles, cement, wheat flour and refined sugar.

Imports into Japan from both China proper and Manchuria increased during the first eight months of 1933 as compared with the corresponding period of last year, the report shows.

Wool Markets.

Boston, Nov. 11 (A.P.) (U. S. Dept. of Agriculture).—Higher quotations cabled from foreign primary wool markets stimulated a more general optimism during the past week in the Boston wool market. Manufacturers have been making inquiries more frequently than during the previous week and they submitted bids a little more freely, but purchases were mostly very limited in volume. Prices were steady on the small quantities of wools that were sold. Some houses continue to ask prices that are above figures realized in early October.

Curb's Prices Finish Higher Under Buying

Metals Remain Mixed in Quotations; Trading, 86,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—The curb market finished today's short session with prices generally steady to moderately higher. The list milled about in irrgeular fashion during the early dealings, but a number of buying orders appeared in the last half hour.

In metals, however, mixed prices prevailed to the finish. Lake Shore Mines and Bunker Hill & Sullivan lost a point or so each, but Newmont and New Jersey Zinc were improved.

Hiram Walker rose nearly 2, while Distillers Corporation-Seagrams gained a major fraction. Oils and utilities were dull and steady. Issues closing sizeable fractions to around a point higher included Aluminum of America, Gulf Oil, Glen Alden Coal and Pan-American Airways.

Transfers approximated 86,000 shares, compared with 102,000 last Saturday.

Wall Street Briefs.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—New business booked at lumber mills in the week ended November 4 was the largest in four weeks and production was down to May levels, reports the National Lumber Manufacturers Association. Total orders were 36 per cent above a year ago, while output was 31 per cent above the corresponding 1932 week. Orders amounted to 169,662,000 feet, production, 159,367,000 feet.

Dun & Bradstreet, in a survey of the drug trade, says it is expected that manufacturers and distributors will close the year in stronger financial position than at the end of 1932. Wholesale volume is running 5 to 10 per cent above a year ago and staples are moving steadily.

Twenty-one chain store companies and two mail order companies had total October sales of $220,656,490, an increase of 4.9 per cent from 1932, says a compilation by Merrill, Lynch & Co. All groups except the grocery division participated in the upturn.

Arrangements have been made for sale of a curb exchange membership for $30,000, an advance of $5,000 over the last sale.

The Bulgarian Government has transferred sufficient funds to provide for payment of 25 per cent on the November 15 coupon on the 7½ per cent stabilization loan of 1928, according to Speyer & Co., fiscal agents. The balance due for interest and sinking fund has been paid the League of Nations commissioner and invested by him in Bulgarian treasury bills in accordance with recommendations of the League Loans Committee.

The Iron Age composite price for heavy melting steel scrap has dropped from $10.17 to $10 a gross ton, registering its tenth consecutive decline. The composite for finished steel receded from 2.023 cents to 2.015 cents a pound, reflecting the second reduction in rail prices.

The Westinghouse Electric Elevator Co., controlled by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., has purchased the elevator business of the Consolidated Steel Corporation, of Los Angeles, Calif., it was announced today.

Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. estimates sales for the four weeks ended October 28 at $63,856,015, against $66,529,705 a year ago, a decrease of 4 per cent. Tonnage sales were 376,069, a decrease of 9.5 per cent from 1932.

Dow, Jones & Co. says cigarette production in the United States last month was about 9,800,000,000, compared with 8,956,374,523 in September and 9,527,722,933 in September, 1932.

Stocks of zinc on hand at the end of October were 95,137 short tons, against 98,219 at the end of September and 121,840 at the end of October, 1932, the American Zinc Institute reported today.

The Aemrican Bankers Association will hold its 1934 convention in Washington, D. C., on October 22-25, it was announced today.

October sales of the Simmons Co. totaled $1,619,653, an increase of 22.8 per cent over a year ago.

Metals Reflect Weakness in Dollar Values

Copper Rallies ¼ Cent; Lead Is Still Unchanged; Zinc Rise Fails.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—Weakness of the dollar in foreign exchange was reflected by a strengthening tendency in some metal markets this week.

Tin, especially, was sharply higher in sympathy with rises at London and in sterling exchange, advancing at one time to a gain of 4 cents per pound for the week and to the highest levels for several years.

More active consumer buying was reported here as well as in London with buyers showing greater interest in forward requirements, than in prompt positions.

Copper up ¼ Cent.

Copper rallied ¼ cent per pound late in the week to 8¼ cents for electrolytic, Connecticut Valley, largely because of higher export quotations.

Ability of smelters to sell to foreign buyers at better prices than recent domestic quotations checked offerings here. While some improvement in interest from fabricators was noted here, buyers were generally reluctant to pay the higher asking prices. A trade committee was continuing work on the copper code, but no definite results were reported.

Although a firm undertone was reported in the lead market, there was no price change. Consumer buying for December delivery was somewhat better on several days, but the total volume was moderate owing partly to a well supplied position of users through recent purchases and smaller specifications for finished products, especially from automobile manufacturers.

Zinc Fails to Rally.

Zinc failed to rally, although sellers were said to be more reluctant to offer at that level, particularly in forward positions. Consumer interest, however, was still limited. Last week's reduction in the ore price was reported to have influenced producers to rescind their recent decision to increase mine production.

Antimony was dull, but a firmer tone was reported owing to weakness of the dollar and relatively higher Chinese replacement costs. As a result, some interests raised nominal asking prices here.

Interest in the steel trade was centered principally on release of Government money for rail purchases and progress of the public works program in absence of general consumer buying. There was still some uncertainty as to how rapidly publicly financed awards would be made. With the automobile industry quiet, steel ingot production eased slightly further to 25.2 per cent.

China's Export Of Tung Oil To U.S. Drops

Exports of tung oil to the United States from Hankow, China, for September were 7,516,000 pounds, in comparison with 10,332,000 pounds for the preceding month and 5,288,000 pounds for September, 1932, according to the Chemical Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Total tung oil exports from Hankow during September were 8,684,000 pounds, as against 15,172,000 for August.

Europe's share of the total exports of oil amounted to 1,168,000 pounds in comparison with 2,840,000 pounds for the preceding month and 2,682,000 pounds for September, 1932. It was estimated locally that stocks of oil on hand at Hankow at the end of September totaled 4,940 short tons.

Although a decline in the total exports of oil to the United States occurred in September, total exports for the first nine months were far in excess of the quantity shipped to the United States during the corresponding months of 1932.

Dominion Legislation To Enforce Wheat Pact

Montreal, Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Federal and Provincial legislation to insure carrying out of the international wheat agreement is expected here this winter.

Though no official announcement has been made, the idea here is that the Dominion government would legislate to restrict exports, while the provinces would deal with the restriction of acreage, but on voluntary rather than compulsory lines. The legislation would be within the respective scopes of Federal and provincial jurisdiction.

Stove Manufacturers Plan Enlarging of Plant

Waynesboro, Va., Nov. 11 (Spl.).—The Rife-Loth Corporation, manufacturers of stoves, have announced plans to enlarge their plant here. Increased production occasioned by greater demand for their products makes a new unit necessary, according to Capt. R. H. Clemmer, president.

No estimate as to the cost of the new building was available but it was stated that actual construction will begin soon and that local labor will be employed as near as possible. The new addition will be used by the pattern department.

Chain Store Sales Advance.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—Sales of the first eight chain and mail order companies to report for October aggregated $50,463,038, a gain of 1.5 per cent over the sales of $49,698,485 reported by the same companies for the like month of last year.

Building Forging Ahead, Dodge Says

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—The F. W. Dodge Corporation said today that the construction industry is "forging ahead under steam fired by the quickening effects of the Federal Public Works program."

The corporation said its figures showed that construction contracts awarded during October in the 37 States east of the Rockies totaled $145,367,200.

"This is a larger volume than has been reported in any month since November, 1931, with the single exception of the May, 1932, total, which exceeded last month's total by less than $1,000,000," the corporation said. "Of as great importance is the fact that the October total was 35 per cent larger than the figure of $107,273,900 reported during October, 1932."

Cotton Rallies On Buying in Spite of Drops

December Closes at 9.82 as Market Nets 1 Point Up to 1 Down.

New York, Nov. 11 (AP).—Opening declines in response to relatively easy Liverpool cables were followed by rallies in cotton today on trade buying and covering. December contracts sold up from 9.75 to 9.87 on this demand, which was evidently encouraged by rallies from the overnight decline in foreign exchange rates and the firmer ruling of the stock market. December closed at 9.82 with the general market closing steady net 1 point lower to 1 higher.

The opening was barely steady at a decline of 7 to 12 points under overnight selling orders, which had evidently been attracted by the reactionary tone of yesterday's late market. There was also some scattered selling on the showing of Liverpool and the rally in the dollar as measured by the early exchange rates. The offerings were comparatively light, however, with very little Southern selling in evidence, and the market soon turned steadier. December liquidation was again absorbed by the trade or price fixing, while a scattering demand for the later months became a little more active following the advance in foreign exchange and the more encouraging action of the stock market. May advanced from the early low of 10.10 to 10.22 with active months generally showing net gains of about 3 to 5 points, but closing quotations were a few points off from the best under realizing and a little more Southern selling.

The midmorning buying was attributed largely to the action of foreign exchange rates, together with the continued reports of a firm Southern spot situation, and the fact that contracts became relatively scarce after the early selling had been absorbed. The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 150,000 bales, against 177,000 last year.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was inactive today, with sales of only two contracts. With the grain markets closed in observance of Armistice Day, there was a disposition to limit fresh commitments, although the undertone was steady with the market closing net unchanged to 1 point lower. Bleachable spot nominal, December 4.75, January 4.88, March 5.05, May 5.22.

Countries Need 525,000,000 Units of Wheat

Rome, Nov. 11 (AP).—Grain importing countries will need 525,000,000 bushels during the coming season, while the exportable supplies of export countries are only 416,000,000 bushels, the International Institute of Agriculture announced today.

Therefore, it said, old crops and stocks must be drawn upon for about 110,000,000 bushels.

Exportable stocks, which at the beginning of the season reached 690,000,000—the greatest accumulation recorded in late years—will thus be under an appreciable reduction so that on August 1, 1934, this will amount to 580,000,000 bushels, the institute announced further.

"There is a prospect of a not insignificant amelioration of the stocks situation," it added, "which has been aggravated each year since 1927."

Railway Seeks Loan for Steel.

The Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul and Pacific Railroad today asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve $1,818,750 of notes to be given the Public Works Administration for a loan to buy 50,000 tons of steel rails.

Sellers' Strike Still Deadlocks Hog Market

All Interests Seek Supplies in Chicago; Cheaper Pigs Sold.

Chicago, Nov. 11 (AP).—The deadlocked hog market was no nearer a solution of its troubles tonight than three days ago when the "sellers' strike" started.

No sales of consequence were reported. Today's fresh supply of 16,000 head carried 15,000 billed direct to the major packing plants.

All interests were in the market seeking supplies, but the highest bid was $4.35 and prices ranged downward from that figure. Commission house salesmen stubbornly reiterated their demands for values steady with those paid Wednesday at $4.50 upward.

Cheaper Pigs Sold.

A few head of the cheaper grades of pigs, light lights and packing sows were sold to small plants, striving to keep killing gangs busy, and to shippers.

Since Wednesday only a single carload of good to choice offerings between 160 and 350 pounds, has been disposed of here. That was Friday when an Eastern shipper filled an urgent order for light hogs at $4.50.

Commission houses were warning farmers not to send in more hogs Monday by pleas in the press, telegrams and telephone calls.

Aim of Dealers.

Commission dealers said they were trying to break up the practice of major packers in ordering huge consignments of hogs billed direct to the killing plants from the farms. They said prices should be set in the Chicago yards and that packers use the direct billing device to force price reductions.

Rumors around the yards said the Secretary of Agriculture was in close touch with the situation, but this was unverified from official sources.

It was the first time in the long history of the Union Stock Yards that hogs could be sold and were not. Many times there have been more on hand than could be sold. Tonight there were 23,000 prime hogs locked up in the yards to be placed on Monday's market with the probable outcome of the controversy still clouded.

Japan Banana Crop Menaced By Insect Pest

The extensive banana-growing area of Japan's Province of Taiwan (Formosa) is threatened by an insect pest, according to a report from Consul John B. Ketchem, made public by the Commerce Department.

The banana follows sugar and rice as the third largest crop of the island, providing a most important item of food for the inhabitants. While the fruit is native to the country, varieties of Central American plants were introduced some years ago. It is these plants which have been especially affected by the pest. The Government realizes the danger to the banana industry if the insect ravages are not checked and is studying the best methods of handling the situation.

The growth of Taiwan's banana industry is revealed in crop figures for recent years which show that production rose from 40,000 tons in 1920 to 184,000 tons in 1932. Banana exports have also steadily increased rising from 33,000 tons in 1917 to 105,000 tons in 1932. Approximately 95 per cent of these exports find a market in Japan.

Vast Lot of Material Used in Dam Work

Boulder City, Nov. 11 (AP).—Bureau of reclamation figures for 30 days on the job show the huge quantities of materials and energy that pass in one month's time into the construction of Boulder Dam.

During the 30-day period, 63,750,000 pounds of cement were used and 5,096 cars of gravel, sand and cobbles were hauled from the Arizona pits to mixing plants. Output in concrete from these mixers was about 147,800 cubic yards.

In the same period 4,000,000 kilowatt hours of electric power were used.

Anticipated 20 Cent Tax On Corn Starts Buying

New York, Nov. 11.—Anticipating that the processing tax of 20 cents per bushel, scheduled to become effective December 1, will bring increases in the selling prices of all corn derivatives, a heavy buying movement in starches, syrups, sugars, dextrins and other products of corn has been in process during the past week.

Leading corn refiners, according to the Corn Industries Research Foundation, have found it necessary to increase their purchases of cash corn and step up operations at a score of refining plants in the corn belt States.

Reclamation Of Land in Italy Pushed

Acreage amounting to 14 per cent of the total area of Italy was in process of reclamation during the current year, according to a report to the Commerce Department from Trade Commissioner E. Humes, Rome.

An official report just issued showed that during the 12-month period ended September 30 last, total area reclaimed or in process of reclamation amounted to 4,276,000 hectares.

The land reclaimed, the report shows, is divided into areas already under cultivation where works of improvement have been carried out, and waste land such as swamp and marsh districts which, owing to unfavorable conditions, were not regarded as arable land.

The reclaimed area is divided into the two classes as defensive reclamation and total reclamation in proportion of 1,491,000 hectares of the former and 2,785,000 hectares of the latter. Under the former class, government works completed or nearing completion totaled 907,000 hectares; and in the total reclamation class, 1,184,000 hectares, a grand total of 2,091,000 hectares. With regard to the balance of 2,185,000 hectares, the work has been started, but is not far enough advanced to be completed in the current year.

Bonneville Dam Is Power Problem

Salem, Oreg., Nov. 11 (U.P.).—Erection of the huge Bonneville Dam across the Columbia River near Portland will create a problem of power distribution methods.

The dam, erected at Government expense, will produce electricity at a cheaper rate than anywhere else in the United States, it is said. A considerable faction in Oregon politics wants all distribution through publicly owned transmission lines. A power amendment to the constitution provides the State may enter the power business.

More conservative Oregonians, many of whom deplore construction of the dam as a waste of money, insist that power must be distributed through existing private companies.

The Bonneville Dam spans the river where tide water meets the Cascade Gorge. It will be 72 feet high and cost $31,000,000.

D.C. Banking Institute Lists Publicity Body

George H. Llewellyn Joins Life Insurance Agency as Adviser.

Members of the publicity committee of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, were announced yesterday by Aubrey O. Dooley, assistant trust officer, Hamilton National Bank and chairman of that committee. They are Willard G. Barker, vice president, Morris Plan Bank; S. Winifred Burwell, assistant trust officer, National Metropolitan Bank; A. E. Henze, W. B. Hibbs & Co.; Henry F. Kimball, American Security & Trust Co., and Norman E. Towson, assistant treasurer, Washington Loan & Trust Co.

In addition to planning and supervising the publicity for the local institute, this committee has been designated by T. Hunton Leith, general chairman, to handle the preconvention publicity for the 1934 national convention of the American Institute of Banking, to be held here June 11 to 14, inclusive.

The primary object of institute publicity is the retention of present members; securing new members and maintaining interest in its educational activities, among both junior and senior bankers. Its other function is to acquaint the general public with the purposes and accomplishments of the American Institute of Banking in the direction of better banking service.

Largest Unit of Kind.

The institute has become the largest single educational institution in the United States. Last year, it had a membership of 57,000, of which number more than 31,000 were enrolled in its educational courses. There are more than 1,200 faculty members, representing the legal, banking, teaching and accounting professions. Study courses in banking are conducted in 288 cities and towns in the United States and in addition, there are more than 1,000 correspondence students located in isolated sections of this country and foreign lands.

At its commencement exercises in September, held simultaneously throughout the country, there were 2,874 students who received graduate certificates. The institute utilizes more than a dozen mediums of publicity in keeping officers and employes of banks informed of its activities.

Mr. Dooley stated that the publicity work of Washington Chapter has won national recognition on several occasions during the past few years. Its publication, Dollars & Sense, has twice been awarded first prize in competition with other institute publications. The local chapter has been an important factor in winning several prizes awarded in the territory having the greatest number of column inches of publicity. Its publicity display at national conventions has been one of the largest and most attractive of the 230 chapters.

Group Provides Information.

This committee will keep members throughout the country informed on the progress of plans for the next national convention and endeavor to create a widespread interest in attendance at the next convention, the first to be held in the Nation's Capital.

The committee will suggest the type of any outdoor displays and decorations used during convention week and assist in the preparation of literature covering the principal convention activities.

Mr. Dooley is a past president of Washington Chapter and was formerly chairman of both the local and national publicity committee. Each of the other members of this committee have had extensive experience in the work of this organization.

Llewellyn Quits Post.

George H. Llewellyn has resigned his position as chief of the Correspondence and Accounting Sections of Government Life Insurance and has joined the John F Cremen agency of the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., as an insurance adviser.

Mr. Llewellyn has been with the Veterans Administration for 15 years and brings a wide knowledge of insurance underwriting to the business, including association with his father, who was superintendent of the Scranton, Pa., office of the Prudential Life Insurance Co. at that time and had several years' experience in the home office of that company.

Virginia Tobacco Brings Top Prices

Richmond, Va., Nov. 11 (AP).—Tobacco sold in Virginia markets during October brought the highest average price obtained since 1929, the United States Department of Agriculture and Virginia Department of Agriculture market service reported today.

Total sales for the month amounted to 11,227,260 pounds at an average price of $14.21 a hundred pounds, as compared with sales of 7,834,922 pounds at an average of $8.94 in the same month last year, the report showed. Canada Wheat In Bushels Put At 271,821,000

Estimate Is Slightly Below September Forecast; Cuts in Other Crops.

Ottawa, Nov. 11 (AP).—The crop report issued today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics estimated Canada's wheat crop at 271,821,000 bushels. This is slightly below the September estimate which placed the crop at 282,771,000. The crop in 1932 totaled 428,514,000 bushels.

The report explained:

"In the maritimes and eastern Canada, there is a general tendency toward higher estimates of grain production, but the changes are slight. In the prairie provinces, rye and flaxseed estimates are lower, except flaxseed in Alberta; wheat is lower in Saskatchewan and Alberta and unchanged in Manitoba; oats are placed higher in Manitoba and Saskatchewan and considerably lower in Alberta; while barley is increased in Saskatchewan and lowered in the other two provinces. The second estimates in British Columbia differ very little from those made in September.

Other Crop Losses.

"The 1933 production of peas, beans, buckwheat, mixed grains and corn are estimated for the first time and all, except buckwheat, show decreases compared with 1932 production. The declines, however, are not as great as expected since the summer drought was followed by rains which were of great benefit to the late-sown crops.

"For the three prairie provinces, the provisional estimate of the yields of the five principal grain crops is, in bushels, as follows, with the figures for 1932 within brackets:

"Wheat, 253,000,000 (408,400,000); oats, 181,071,000 (245,726,000); barley, 47,653,000 (63,114,000); rye, 3,645,000 (7,738,000); flaxseed, 613,000 (2,367,000).

Yields by Provinces.

"By provinces the yields are as follows: Manitoba—Wheat, 32,600,000 (42,400,000); oats, 28,756,000 (36,826,000); barley, 16,573,000 (20,014,000); rye, 559,000 (560,000); flaxseed, 100,000 (240,000). Saskatchewan—Wheat, 125,300,000 (202,000,000); oats, 78,164,000 (107,400,000); barley, 18,297,000 (23,400,000); rye, 1,733,000 (5,190,000); flaxseed, 472,000 (1,980,000). Alberta—Wheat, 95,100,000 (164,000,000); oats, 74,151,000 (101,500,000); barley, 12,783,000 (19,700,000); rye, 1,353,000 (1,988,000); flaxseed, 41,000 (147,000).

"The second estimate of wheat production in the Prairie Provinces is 253,000,000 bushels, a reduction of 4 per cent compared with the preliminary estimate of 264,000,000 bushels issued on September 11. The Manitoba estimate of production is unchanged. Saskatchewan is lowered by 3,000,000 bushels and Alberta by 8,000,000 bushels.

"The acreages used for the two estimates are identical and are based on the June survey schedules returned by 55,758 prairie farmers. The yields per acre are based on schedules returned by nearly 7,000 correspondents in the three provinces. Since threshing is practically complete, the estimates are more reliable than those made on September 11."

Japan's Glass Industry Rises During 1933

Increased activity in Japan's glass industry is revealed in a report to the Commerce Department from Assistant Trade Commissioner Donald W. Smith, Tokyo.

Total Japanese output of glass and glassware in 1932 had a value of 45,000,000 yen compared with 34,388,000 yen in 1931. It is estimated locally, according to the report, that production in the current year will reach a value of approximately 50,000,000 yen. Plate glass is by far the most important item produced by Japanese glass manufacturers.

During the past ten years, Japanese exports of glass and glassware have had an average annual value of 12,190,000 yen, or about 27 per cent of production. Exports for the first eight months of the current year indicate that the 1933 total may reach 15,000,000 yen, the highest figure since 1927. Approximately 85 per cent of Japan's exports of glass products are sold in Asia, with British India, Netherland India and China the principal outlets.

Shipments of Japanese glassware to the United States rose sharply in 1932, the report shows, reaching a total of 492,000 yen, compared with average annual exports of 175,000 yen for the preceding five-year period. Exports to the United States during the first eight months of 1933 amounted to 474,000 yen. During 1932, the chief item of Japanese glass exports to the United States was "beads and balls," which accounted for two-thirds of total shipments.

(Par value of yen, 49.85 cents, U. S. currency.)

Origin of Iron Working Found in Four Areas

(Associated Press.)

The use of iron, on which is founded much of modern civilization, developed independently in four widely-separated regions of the earth, says the Smithsonian Institution.

The regions, all of which contained iron ore deposits, were the Malay archipelago, India, Europe and Nigeria, in West Africa.

Railroad Orders Auto Box Cars.

Philadelphia, Nov. 11 (AP).—The Pennsylvania Railroad today ordered 500 automobile box cars of large dimensions to be constructed in the company's shops. The work will be financed from the $84,000,000 loan granted by the Public Works Administration for completing the line's electrification of the road from New York to Washington, and for new equipment.

The Boston spot price of the Exchange standard top held unchanged at 109.5 cents. Business in that market continued to be very slow.

Chile Plans To Remove Wheat Curbs

Because of a surplus of wheat on hand, and in order to maintain the officially fixed price, Chile is planning to remove restrictions on exports of that grain, according to Vice Consul C. L. McLain, Santiago, in a report made public by the Commerce Department.

Increasingly large imports of wheat into Chile, the report points out, caused the government last year to undertake a campaign to induce the farmers to plant greater acreage to this grain. With government cooperation, production increased from 5,766,000 metric quintals in 1932 to 7,823,000 metric quintals in the current year. With this crop and estimated imports of about 570,000 quintals of wheat and 190,000 quintals of flour, it is said locally there is an oversupply of breadstuffs in the country.

The agricultural export board has already authorized the exportation of 200,000 metric quintals, but since there is a divergence of opinion on production, present stocks and the requirements of the country, which has not been entirely cleared up by the figures issued by the general statistical office, a commission has been named by the government to study the true status of the wheat industry.

Chilean estimates of the 1933-34 wheat crop, which will be harvested during December and January, place it from 5 to 10 per cent above that of last year. If this estimate should prove to be accurate, the report declares, then Chile's "battle of grain" would be sufficient to supply domestic demands for at least one year, or until such a time as production is again allowed to go below normal levels.

(Metric quintal equals 3.674 bushels.)

Virginia Hen Wins As Egg Champion

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 11 (Spl.). At the Century of Progress egg laying contest which closed recently at Chicago the pen of Barred Rocks, owned by Thomas L. Rosser, of the university, finished with a score of 935 eggs and 918 points, thereby winning second place in egg production and third place by points among the Barred Rocks. But it also took first place in all breeds from the Southern States.

The contest lasted five months and there were 122 pens from 24 States and Canada. There were 17 pens of Barred Rocks at the contest.

Pens from Mr. Rosser's Ruby flock also have just finished in first place among the Barred Rocks at the Georgia contest held at Athens, and in second place at the Alabama contest at Auburn, while a third pen at the Connecticut Agricultural College at Storrs finished with a record of 2,256 eggs and 2,274 points in 51 weeks.

Mexico Fixes Peso At 3.60 to Dollar

Mexico, D. F., Nov. 11 (AP).—The peso was held firmly today at 3.60 to the dollar, apparently the point at which the Bank of Mexico has decided to stabilize it, instead of 3.55, at which it has been pegged for several months.

Informed circles saw in the cheapening of the peso a move to offset possible depreciation of the dollar as a result of foreign purchases of gold by the United States, which would mean a decrease of imports and stimulation of exports, as well as a simultaneous raise in the domestic price level.

About 80 per cent of all Mexico's foreign trade is with the United States.

Harvard Review Points to NRA As Subject of Legal Conflict

Constitutionality of Act Regarded as Question of "Judicial Psychology;" Experts Conclude There Is No Insuperable Obstacle to Its Being Upheld.

Cambridge, Mass., Nov. 11.—A comprehensive survey of the National Recovery Act, dealing particularly with its constitutionality and enforceability, has been prepared for publication in the Harvard Law Review, it was announced today at University Hall.

The article, written by editors of the Review, treats many of the legal aspects of the NRA, now a subject of conflict among lawyers, and lays particular stress upon the effect of the new legislation on the antitrust laws and the status of labor.

The constitutionality of the act, the editors state, is largely a question of "judicial psychology." They hazard no prophecy as to the Supreme Court's decision, but conclude that there is no insuperable obstacle to its being upheld.

Possibilities in Depression.

The emergency caused by the depression may be used as a ground for either overruling or distinguishing decisions which might otherwise serve as a basis for overthrowing the act. The article prophesies, however, that the codes for purely local business—retail trade and the like—will be held unenforceable.

A considerable portion of the survey is devoted to the extent of the modification of the antitrust laws—a question which has been much debated by lawyers.

The opinion held by many that the antitrust laws are practically abolished by the NRA is repudiated by the Harvard Law Review, and it is shown how the courts, by adopting a "modified rule of reason," can allow industrial cooperation without opening the door to monopolistic abuses by profiteers. At the same time, a warning is issued of the possible conflict with State antitrust laws, and the necessity for new State legislation is stressed.

Labor Law and NRA.

An explanation of the many strikes and the phenomenal growth of labor unions since the act was adopted is offered in the discussion of the labor provisions.

While recognizing the tremendous advantages given labor under the NRA, the survey finds that "in the vast number of codes an opportunity has been missed to make collective bargaining concrete. Only concreteness can obviate narrowing construction of the statute by the court, prevent self-favoring 'interpretations' by management or labor and make collective bargaining eventually effective for industrial self-government."

Because of the Government's attempt to promote self-regulation of industry, the article suggests the possibility of developing powerful trade associations. It is pointed out that these groups, by incorporating the code provisions as a part of their own rules, can become effective enforcement agencies through their ability to expel and fine their members.

The authors recognize that "attempting the evaluation of the act from a purely legal viewpoint would be a blind refusal to face realities," but they point out that the NRA will have important legal as well as economic effects. "Because so much of our law is but a reflection of economic conditions and business standards, any great change in those conditions and those standards must have a deep effect upon that law. When the law is static, conflict with the altered economy is inevitable. Where it is flexible, precedents which are established will be of the highest importance for the future."

The interesting analysis made of the various code provisions which have been approved shows in striking form that high ethical standards are to be demanded of industry. Some of the regulations which only indirectly affect competition—such as that preventing theatrical producers from releasing actors who wish to enter the movies—are considered as going beyond the scope of the recovery act.

An interpretation of the statute is advocated which outlaws "cutthroat selling" without permitting interference with all stages of manufacture and production. Price-fixing provisions are thought by the review to be legal, but only when designed to eliminate economic waste, and not when used to unduly increase profits at the expense of the consumer.

Post Offices Bonds Backing Up New Plan

New York, Nov. 11.—The bondholders protective committee for United Post Offices Corporation first mortgage 5½ per cent sinking fund bonds announces that more than a majority of the outstanding bonds have been deposited with the committee. Members of the committee are Harold G. Hathaway, of Edward B. Smith & Co.; P. Blair Lee, of Brown Brothers, Harriman & Co., and A. Perry Osborn, of Redmond & Co.

Through the cooperative efforts of the committee and the management, it is announced that operating expenses and accrued taxes have been reduced and that a substantial reduction in the annual expenses for taxes in 1934 may be expected. As soon as overdue taxes have been liquidated, it is agreed that all surplus cash income over and above operating expenses shall be placed in a special fund under the joint control of the management and of the protective committee.

The plan of reorganization is being deferred until the company's future income can be determined more definitely. While the deposits to date have been sufficient to enable the committee to make considerable progress, it is pointed out that they are not sufficient to give the committee assurance that the bondholders as a whole desire it to act on their behalf. Additional deposits are urged so that bondholders may be adequately represented in any negotiations undertaken by the committee.

World's Three Great Nations Join in Record Battle for Gold

(Copyright, 1933, by The Associated Press.)

New York, Nov. 11.—Although the gold standard is functioning in only a few countries, probably never before has there been such keen competition between great powers for this mysterious metal.

Therefore the announcement that the United States, with already a third of the world's monetary gold, would buy more gold abroad was received rather coolly in London and Paris.

The United States has made clear it intends no disturbing raid on foreign metal stocks, but will buy only enough to control the dollar.

The monetary gold of the three great financial powers, at par of exchange, is now about as follows: United States, $4,300,000,000; France, $3,200,000,000; England, $950,000,000.

London, while maintaining her position as world banker, has never been a large gold hoarder in modern times, and has complained that piling it up hugely in America and France disturbed world economics. Since forced off the gold standard in 1931, however, London through her powerful equalization fund has gone about replenishing her yellow metal.

London's historic position as world banker and clearing house depended not on her gold supplies, but her highly organized market for short-term commercial credits. It is through bankers' exchanges of such credits, and through exchanges of securities enjoying an international market that most of the transfer of funds between nations is done. Under the international gold standard, gold is called upon only when a large movement exhausts the supply of credits.

The system has gone awry, most authorities believe, because of huge shifting of capital resulting from the World War, and the building up of large supplies of timid money which may shift suddenly from one center to another, so straining the system of international clearing that it breaks down.

Gold came to New York in prodigious quantities in payment for war supplies and for exports after the war. The French gold position was built up partly by return of funds that had fled from postwar inflation and confusion. Also, in stabilizing the franc at a low level, the Bank of France built up enormous foreign balances through selling francs and buying other currencies to keep the franc from rising before it was definitely established on a gold basis. The bank has since called back the balances, getting gold.

Russia Is Seen Importing Oil As Wells Fail

Drying-Up of Fields Laid to Neglect; No New Areas in Sight.

New York, Nov. 11.—Trade agreements with Soviet Russia will have a far reaching effect upon our exports of petroleum and of gasoline, it is set forth in the T. S. Hose review of the current oil situation, which maintains that due to disregard of conservation many of the oil fields outside of the United States are on the decline, with virtually no potential fields in sight.

"This is due to the fact," says the review, "that most fields have been operated without regard for conservation of pressure, and in many countries when the flowing was over have been abandoned, not pumped, as is the custom in this country. This practice tends to permanently ruin the wells.

"Within the coming year Soviet Russia may be unable to supply its demand from its own oil fields, and it is quite possible that large purchases of this commodity will be made from the United States. The Baku Field, the only field in Russia that had any real potentials, is decidedly on the decline; was unable to produce the oil required from it, and an extensive drilling program is now in progress.

Wells Being Bored.

"Nearly 300 wells are being put down. These wells will mean that the field is too closely drilled; the flowing energy will not only be very short lived but also will sap the gas pressure from the now existing wells, and the whole field will probably be on the pump within the next six months and be producing less than one-fifth of the oil it is producing today. This is Russia's only real petroleum reserve. She is requiring more petroleum products all the while, due to the increased use of tractors and other equipment propelled by gasoline.

"Of course, there is always the possibility that a new oil field may be discovered, but I doubt it. It would, therefore, appear that the American oil producer may expect a substantial increase in his export business due to the conditions in the Baku Field alone, and that a fair portion of the money that Soviet Russia will spend in this country will go for the greatest of all commodities—oil.

"Up until four years ago, our own oil fields were allowed to flow unhindered until the gas pressure was depleted to a point where the pump must be resorted to. Untold millions of barrels of oil have been channeled off and lost forever through the former wasteful and uneconomic method.

Methods of Recovering.

"By controlling production through the medium of proration, thus conserving the gas pressure in the ground and allowing oil to be produced at a much slower rate than were it allowed to flow naturally, the greatest ultimate recovery is being obtained. While this Nation will some day face an acute shortage of crude we are today, thanks to the drastic regulations which have been laid down in order that supply and demand might be balanced, the only nation that is looking ahead and the future. These laws of proration have caused unfavorable criticism. Monthly returns to royalty owners and producers have been cut, but they will be made up by higher prices and greater recovery in the years that are to come.

"During the past four years foreign crude has been dumped on our shores to the detriment of American labor and American capital affiliated with this great industry. This situation is about to be reversed and the world will call on us for its supply of petroleum, and that demand will begin during 1934. If the United States continues its present policy of conserving its greatest of all natural wealth, the world will be utterly dependent upon us within the next 10 years for petroleum and the products derived therefrom.

"The seriousness of such a situation can be realized by the fact that the armistice would have been signed several months later than it actually was if Germany had been able to procure lubricating oil.

"The above statements are the result of a very interesting survey recently completed covering practically all of the great oil fields of the world."

Chinese Pirate Sorry, He Says, But Must Live

Band Takes $15,000 From Passengers and Crew and Escapes.

Shanghai (AP).—Strange tales come into Shanghai of the pirate raids that occur along China's "Spanish Main"—the buccaneer-infested waters lying between French Indo-China and Tientsin.

The latest story, this time more picturesque than tragic, is that of a buccaneer gang who boarded the Chinese coaster Hsinping.

As usual this band, numbering nine, boarded the steamer disguised as passengers. No sooner had the ship got to sea than they whipped out their guns, overpowered the officers and got control of the bridge. Firing a volley over the heads of the passengers the raiders proceeded blithely to work.

Have Lunch on Board.

All day they leisurely chose what they wanted from the passengers' possessions and the ship's cargo and stores, taking time to have lunch served them by the crew.

After the repast the leader, described as a "gray-bearded old man" made a speech to the passengers. He asked their pardon for having to rob them, saying that "pirates have to live." He added that he came of a wealthy family but that with their riches gone, he was forced to become a pirate to "keep body and soul together."

Takes $15,000 Loot.

Contrary to the usual tactics of these buccaneers, who generally are a rascally and murderous lot, he assured the passengers his band would "molest no one unless bothered with."

The desperadoes remained aboard until nightfall, then scuttled over the side into waiting small boats, whose occupants knew when the ship would arrive. They took $15,000 worth of loot and vanished.

Whittier School Pupils Share Desks for Day With Mothers

Experiment Intended to Increase Cooperation and Understanding.

School days, those dear old Golden Rule days, were relived by mothers of children at the Whittier School yesterday. Instead of kissing their little boys and girls good-by after breakfast, they went along to school with them and attended classes.

It was all part of a plan devised by Miss Elsie Green, administrative principal of the school. For the past few weeks the mothers have been meeting after school with the teachers to discuss methods used in teaching their children.

Then they sat at desks in the same classrooms with their children and saw these methods in action. And were they pleased!

"I'll never worry about Jimmie when he's in school any more," one mother said. "I know he's getting the finest possible sort of training, quite different from that when I went to school."

Reading methods were considered by the parents. Arithmetic will be taken up next. After a series of meetings with teachers, the mothers will enter classrooms again and observe their children being taught this subject.

When they were "dismissed from class" yesterday, the mothers gave the principal a vote of thanks for a program, which, they said, has resulted in a closer understanding of the teaching problems of their children.

Faculty members who cooperated with Miss Green in the experiment were Mrs. Katherine Price Deane, Miss May D. Jack, Miss Elsie E. Michaelson, Mrs. Laskey Johnson Howard, Miss Lucy E. Hopkins, Miss Madge Johnson, Miss Lillian L. Sheid, Mrs. Hazel Dyer Marmaduke, Mrs. Lucille Heilman, Mrs. Isabelle McCallum Luneski, Mrs. Hazel Speare Beall, Mrs. Grace Pass, Miss Marion E. Scott, Mrs. Rosa B. Baer and Miss Catherine Demarest. The experiment was conducted with the approval of Dr. Julia L. Hahn, supervising principal of the third division of local public schools.

Tubercular Need Stated in Report

Reopening of Sanatorium for Children Urged.

The need of opening the sanatorium for tubercular children at the earliest possible moment as well as the need of an adequate adult hospital for tuberculosis patients was stressed in the report of the Children's Tuberculosis Clinic issued yesterday. The clinic at 301 C street northwest is conducted by the Health Department in cooperation with the D. C. Tuberculosis Association and is financed partially from the annual sale of Christmas seals.

Of 812 children examined from May 1 to October 26 the report states that 22.6 per cent were diagnosed as suffering from childhood tuberculosis and a number were found to have pulmonary tuberculosis.

In practically every instance the child's affliction was traced to a home where there was an active case of the disease. Several families in which either the father or mother was suffering from the disease and in turn giving it to the children were cited in the report. In one instance Emergency Relief was called to provide more adequate food and milk.

Restoring Lines Of Battlefields Big C. C. C. Job

Aim to Have Civil War Grounds Show How History Was Made.

(Associated Press.)

Emergency conservation officials look upon the improvement of historical reservations in Virginia as one of the most important phases of the program of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

There are four camps in the Colonial National Monument on the Virginia peninsula, 400 men each are at work in the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefield Memorial and the Petersburg National Park and another encampment located in Fort Harrison Battlefield, a State park near Richmond.

Mark Big Battle Scenes.

All except the Colonial Monument commemorate important engagements of the war between the States.

The conservation workers are carrying out a carefully planned program at each of these historic spots, their headquarters said yesterday.

Weed-covered breastworks and gun emplacements are being cleaned off so that students and tourists may visualize the lines of fighting men engaged in history making.

The Government does not plan to make complete restoration in any of these battlefield areas, it was said, but it does plan to restore them to such condition that the average visitor may come away with a clear understanding of the important events that took place there and their relation to the growth and development of the Nation.

Fire Hazards Removed.

Fire hazards are being removed and trails built to the special points of historic interest.

A few guides may be placed in the battlefield parks such as has been done at the Colonial Monument and at Wakefield, George Washington's birthplace, now a national shrine.

Robert L. Fechner, conservation director, commenting on the work, said:

"Many of the most brilliant pages of the world's history were written in the areas that this small group of conservation workers are engaged in protecting and preserving, and these men would always be proud of their part in the unique job of bringing closer to our people much of their most precious historical heritage."

Mrs. Josephine Dunbar Buried in St. Mary's

Nurse Silent As Grace Case Nears Trial

Defense Will Not Deny Woman Fired Shot Killing Shipper.

Santa Cruz, Calif., Nov. 11 (AP).—Silent on the motive for the slaying of Francis J. M. Grace, wealthy former member of W. R. Grace & Co., shipping firm, Miss Frieda Wilhelmina Weltz, 43, a nurse, is to go on trial here tomorrow for murder.

John Duggan, jr., an old friend of the Weltz family at Connellsville, Pa., who came here from Pittsburgh to defend the nurse, said her counsel would make no attempt to deny she fired the shot which killed her 57-year old former employer September 9.

While declining to disclose Miss Weltz's story of the tragedy, Duggan expressed the belief it would bring about her acquittal.

"We will neither deny that she fired the shot," said Duggan, "nor will we try to establish a theory of accident. We shall, however, seek to disprove any contention of premediation and contest all efforts to prove that Miss Weltz tracked Grace over an extended period with intent to kill him."

Grace was shot on the lawn of his summer home here as he sat talking to another nurse. The defense was expected to make an effort to bar from testimony statements attributed by officers to Miss Weltz that evening on the ground that she was under the influence of a sedative after the tragedy.

Alfred E. Smith To Join Board At Catholic U.

Trustee Meeting to Bring Many of Hierarchy Here Wednesday.

The board of trustees of Catholic University, headed by His Eminence, William Cardinal O'Connell, Archbishop of Boston, as chairman, will be present on the campus Wednesday and Thursday for their annual fall meeting when Alfred E. Smith, five times governor of New York and former Democratic candidate for President, will assume his duties as a member of the board, to which he was elected last spring. The meeting will bring to Washington members of the American hierarchy from all over the United States, constituting the enrollment of the board.

The traditional ceremonies of Tap Day will be carried out on Wednesday when the four social organizations on the campus, the Abbey Club, Onega Chapter of Phi Kappa National Fraternity, the Senators Club and the Utopian Club, tender "bids" to those students they wish to enroll. Men who are to receive "bids" will be notified before the hour of tap and will line up in front of Gibbons Hall. There the club presidents will offer them formal "bids" to membership. Departure of Americans for Montevideo To Curb Washington Society Program

Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull Sail With Other Delegates to Pan-American Conference; Brilliant Fetes Expected in Uruguay Capital.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Capital society, following annually a set program of official entertaining, has learned to adjust itself to the changes which occur even among the most traditional functions. State receptions and dinners, official days at home and New Year's receptions frequently are set aside because of state mourning and absences from the country.

This year the official program will be irregular for a few months due to the absence of the Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull, who sailed yesterday from New York aboard the American Legion to attend the Pan-American Conference, opening in Montevideo, Uruguay, on December 3. The beautiful capital of the southern republic will be a mecca for distinguished delegates from all countries of this hemisphere. President Roosevelt is most interested in Latin-American politics and is anxious to preserve and establish the best possible relations with our southern neighbors. So for several weeks, Montevideo will be the center of great social activity, as well as of political negotiations.

Sailing yesterday with the Secretary and Mrs. Hull were the Chief of the Protocol Division of the State Department and Mrs. James Clement Dunn and Mr. and Mrs. Spruille Braden, of New York, the former one of the American delegates. Mr. and Mrs. Braden have been frequent visitors in Washington at the Chilean Embassy and are well known here. Mrs. Braden is Chilean by birth and Mr. Braden was among those mentioned as a possible appointee as Ambassador to Chile.

The former United States Ambassador to Mexico, Mr. J. Reuben Clark, also is one of the American delegates who sailed yesterday, as did Dr. Sophonisba Breckinridge, of the University of Chicago, only woman delegate from the United States. The other two delegates are the United States Ambassador to Argentina, Mr. Alexander W. Weddell, who, with Mrs. Weddell, is in Buenos Aires, and Mr. J. Butler Wright, United States Minister to Montevideo, who will be an unofficial host to the Americans in the Uruguayan capital for the duration of the conference.

The trip to Montevideo will be gay with so many passengers aboard the American Legoin, who are already acquainted and so many who will be delightful new acquaintances for the Washingtonians making the trip. Mrs. Richard Brown Scandrett, sr., sister of the late Ambassador to Mexico, Mr. Dwight W. Morrow, is among the passengers who sailed yesterday, as are Dr. Leo S. Rowe, director general of the Pan-American Union; Miss Fanny Bunand-Sevastos, young and charming secretary of the Pan-American Union; Senor Jose Tercero, chief translator of the Pan-American Union; the counselor of the Venezuelan Legation, Senor Dr. Luis Churion, who is a delegate for his country, and the Minister of Honduras, Senor Miguel Paz Baraono.

Mr. Hugh S. Cummings, jr., son of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service and Mrs. Cummings, is making the trip as assistant to Secretary Hull. Mr. Cummings has been in the office of Mr. Hull for several months. Mr. Warren H. Kelchner, also of the Department of State, sailed yesterday with the party.

Mr. Benjamin Cohen Represents Chile.

Mr. Benjamin Cohen, Counselor of the Chilean Embassy, sailed last week for Santiago, from where he will go to Monteviedo as Chilean delegate. Mr. Cohen has been secretary to several Pan American conferences and had expected to hold the same position this year, acting not only as secretary general of the entire conference, but handling all the negotiations of the government of Uruguay. However, he recently received word that he was to have the honor of representing his own country as a delegate and will spend a short time in Santiago conferring with the minister of foreign affairs, Senor Don Miguel Cruchaga Tocornal, former Chilean Ambassador to Washington. Don Miguel himself will be another of the Chilean delegates at the conference and will find many of his Washington friends among the American delegation.

The Minister of Uruguay, Mr. J. Varela, with Mme. Varela and their daughters, Mlle. Adele and Mlle. Mareya, sailed some time ago for their home.

With so many distinguished visitors from Washington, Montevideo will assume the aspect of a small slice of our Capital for the duration of the conference and the entertaining will be brilliant.

At any capital in the world, those who have lived in Washington are apt to find old friends and acquaintances seated next to them at a dinner table. So changing is the population of Washington that the permanent residents have only to wait a few years for former diplomats to return in the same or in higher office.

A letter from Tokyo describes a recent dinner given by the United States Ambassador and Mrs. Joseph C. Grew at the American Embassy. The guests sat at two long tables in the dining room, which were decorated with miniature Japanese gardens. Tiny live goldfish swam in the lakes and diminutive pine trees sheltered lighted Japanese stone lanterns and tiny peasant huts. After dinner there was dancing, when additional guests were invited.

Among the guests were several well known in Washington a num-

Miss Gardner Becomes Bride Of Mr. Berry

Flower-Decked Church Was Scene of Ceremony Last Night.

Miss Mary Louise Gardner, daughter of Mr. Charles Beveridge Gardner, and Mr. Sherman Spencer Berry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Nelson Berry, of Stafford County, Va., were married at 8 o'clock last night in the Western Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Harvey J. Dunham performed the ceremony. The church was decorated with white chrysanthemums, palms, ferns and baskets of bronze chrysanthemums.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white satin, made on princess lines with a square neck. The sleeves were shirred at the shoulder and had long-fitted cuffs. The long full skirt formed a graceful fan-shaped train. Her veil of tulle was simply arranged and caught with bands of seed pearls. She carried a sheaf of calla lilies, tied with long satin streamers.

The maid of honor was Miss Louise Hudson. Her frock was of white lace made on long flaring lines with a short train. She wore a small close-fitting hat of rust-colored velvet and slippers of a matching shade and carried a sheaf of rust chrysanthemums.

Reception After Ceremony.

The bridesmaids were Miss Margaret Frances Gardner, of Jacksonville, Fla., a cousin of the bride, and Miss Helen Margaret Bowers. Their costumes, like that of the maid of honor, were of white lace, with velvet hats and slippers of rust color. They carried arm bouquets of rust chrysanthemums.

The best man was Mr. Travers William Gardner, brother of the bride, and the ushers were Mr. Ernest Parker, Mr. John Thacker, Mr. Eugene Byrd and Mr. Edward Duval, all of Washington.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Frederick Grenfell, uncle and aunt of the bride. The bride and bridegroom were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Grenfell, who wore a gown of black velvet trimmed with ecru lace and a shoulder corsage of gardenias, and Mrs. Norman Nelson Berry, mother of the bridegroom, who was costumed in blackberry-colored velvet and wore a corsage of gardenias.

Leave on Wedding Trip.

The house was effectively decorated with chrysanthemums of white and rust, palms and ferns.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Berry left by motor for their wedding trip, Mrs. Berry wearing a suit of dark green basket weave timmed with Kolinsky, brown accessories and a corsage of gardenias and lilies of the valley. Upon their return they will make their home in Stafford County, Va.

Mrs. Berry attended George Washington University. Mr. Berry attended Virginia Polytechnic Institute and George Washington University Law School.

Radio Waves and Ripples

We think the dial twisters will like best today the things National is doing to celebrate Radio City Week, and Columbia's broadcast of an all-Tschaikovsky concert by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under the direction of Bruno Walter.

There will be seven days of special broadcasts in the N. B. C. celebration. The first will present an orchestra under the direction of Joseph Littau and a mixed chorus of 16 voices in a semi-religious program from 8 to 9 a. m. today. Famous story book characters will be put to drama in a "Radio City Story Book Festival," which will replace the regular N. B. C. Children's Hour at 9 a. m.

More impressive, however, is the announcement of a concert by the largest orchestra ever to go on the air—an organization of 400 pieces—to be conducted alternately by Walter Damrosch, the New York Philharmonic's Bruno Walter, Metropolitan Opera's Artur Bodanzky and Curtis Institute's Fritz Reiner. Bodanzky opens the program with the prelude to "Die Meistersinger" at 8 p. m.

Impressive, too, we thought, are plans for an interfaith dedication of the studios from 11:30 to midnight which call for bringing to the microphone the Rev. Dr. Fulton J. Sheen, of Catholic University; Dr. John W. Langdale, chairman of the Federal Council of Churches radio committee, and the Rev. Dr. David de Sola Pool, rabbi of Temple Sheridith Israel, oldest Jewish church in the Nation.

WMAL and WRC, N. B. C. Capital outlets, will divide the programs, WMAL remaining on the air until 1 a. m. tomorrow.

The Walter program, in which Greta Stueckgold, soprano, will be the soloist, will open with a reading of the fantasy, "Francesca da Rimini." Next, Miss Stueckgold will sing the aria of the "Letter Scene" from the opera, "Eugin Onegin." Lawrence Gillman, New York Herald-Tribune music critic, will radio comments during the intermission. Concluding number will be the Tschaikovsky Symphony No. 5 in E minor.

Whitecaps.

WRC—Orchestra and mixed choir program in tribute to Radio City, 8 a. m.; Radio City Story Book Festival, a full hour production devoted to musical dramatizations of famous characters of fiction and fairy tales, 9 a. m.; Chevrolet program, Jack Benny, Mary Livingstone, Frank Parker, medley of tunes from "As Thousands Cheer," 10 p. m.

WMAL—Radio City concert. Walter Damrosch and guest conductors directing 400-piece symphony, 12:30 p. m.; International Opera Co., broadcast. Carmela Ponselle, Giuseppe Martino-Rossi, and five other stars of The Post's opera series. 10 p. m.; Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra in a special program to greet Radio City, 11:30 p. m.

WJSV—New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, 3 p. m.; Parade of Champions, George Gershwin playing "Rhapsody in Blue" and other of his compositions, 8:45 p. m.; Seven-Star Revue, Nino Martini singing "Oh, Promise Me" from "Robin Hood," Jane Froman singing "Someday I'll Find You," "Dancing in the Dark," 9 p. m.

WOL—Church of the Air, 1:45 p. m.; Juvenile Parade, 2:30 p. m.; Father Coughlin, 4 p. m.; Washington Catholic Radio Hour, 5 p. m.

Leopold Stokowski conducting. The distinguished director of the Philadelphia Orchestra (top picture), brings his remarkable musical organization to a Columbia microphone in a series of nightly 15-minute programs, starting November 28, in addition to his regular Friday afternoon concerts. Bruno Walter (lower right), directs the New York Philharmonic-Symphony in Sunday C. B. S. broadcasts. The Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt impersonator is Marion Hopkinson on "March of Time."

President Roosevelt, master of microphone style, uses three distinct speech methods, according to the man who imitates him for March of Time, Actor William Adams.

Says Adams:

"One is the dramatic style he employs when making a formal address. Another is the intensely sincere and warm voice he uses in his fireside chats. The third is the casual and friendly voice he employs in ordinary conversation. There is a difference of some five musical tones between the first and third styles."

When Columbia brings back its "Conclave of Nations" broadcast next Sunday, after a lapse of two years, it will be with musical numbers of its own selection. C. B. S. used to let the ambassadors, ministers, consuls and what-not pick numbers for their programs, until one of them sent to South Africa for music.

Ahmet Muhtar, Turkish Ambassador and dean of the Washington diplomatic corps, will be the first speaker. The program has been reserved, 10:30 to 11 p. m., for this and succeeding Sundays.

The Rev. Paul Lindeman, American Lutheran editor, and the Most Rev. Francis C. Kelley, Bishop of Oklahoma City, will be in charge of morning and afternoon periods, respectively, of C. B. S.'s Church of the Air today, 10 a. m. and 1 p. m.

Columbia's transatlanic radioing of six members of the Public Affairs Institute Committee on International broadcasting begins today with the Marquis of Louthian speaking from London, at 12:45 p. m.

Carlos Gardel, South American baritone, has been acquired by N. B. C. for a series of air recitals.

National says he's the idol of Brazil and Argenina. Crowds follow him in the streets, affectionately calling to him, "Carlios!" He packs concert halls and stars in South American movies.

National has its eye on a South American symphonic program for him.

Ripples.

Guy Lombardo, they say, is on the verge of a European tour...he's at the Earle this week...Philip Lord (Seth Parker) finally got those round-the-world-cruise-in-a-four-mast-schooner plans all straightened out...there will be a series of 13 weekly broadcasts from the ship as it sails from Portland to Miami, beginning December 5...Lord will be away for a year and a half or more, keeping in touch with this country by a short wave...more radio talent is playing local playhouses this week—Barney Rapp and John Fogarty, the Fox...Columbia means to put into your loudspeakers the noise of the slamming of the gates and the clicking of the lock that will close the World's Fair tomorrow a 12:45 a. m....staying up?

Work

Taken From The Christian Science Monitor.

A comprehensive and beautiful view of work has been given to the world in this statement by Mary Baker Eddy, on page 3 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "To understand God is the work of eternity, and demands absolute concecration of thought, energy, and desire." This statement was proved to be practical when applied by a student of Christian Science who was called upon to carry out several important duties in addition to regular work which in itself seemed sufficient for one individual to perform. The sense of burden and anxiety which at first accompanied the allotment of the tasks disappeared with the recognition that, in reality, the work to be done throughout each day was "to understand God."

Instead of unduly contemplating this or that task which must be accomplished in a given time, attention was more earnestly directed to seeking what further understanding of God there was to be had in the performance of each duty. The suggestion of strenuous toil, looming up in seeming mountainous proportions, was resolutely put out of thought, and every day begun with eager expectancy of the good that was to be revealed. And unfolding good came in full measure. The consciousness of dominion over circumstances attended this deeper reliance and dependence upon God. Hidden strength was found and a greater sense of reflected ability gained. More patience and a more universal sense of love were drawn from the one infinite source and expressed. Opportunities for better cooperation and unselfed service were utilized, and this resulted in a more harmonious relationship with fellow workers. In short, the year's work was accomplished joyously and easily, so bearing the fruit of a fuller consciousness of unity with God and of an understanding of His presense and power.

The application of the true concept of work is not limited to those who seem to have more than their share of labor, but it is equally practical to those who believe they have too little or none. It is the privilege of everyone to understand God; and he who obeys the demand to consecrate his thought, energy, and desire to this sacred work will find his thinking well employed. This will bring with it a satisfying manifestation of usefulness and remuneration. The spiritual sense of the Bible, in the light thrown upon it by the Christian Science textbook, presents the true idea of God, which is inevitably gained as these books are faithfully studied.

The understanding of God necessarily includes the understanding of man, who is the reflection of God and is therefore like Him. Pondering the truth that God is "the great I AM; the all-knowing, all-seeing, all-acting, all-wise, all-loving, and eternal; Principle; Mind; Soul; Spirit; Life; Truth; Love; all substance; intelligence" (Science and Health, p. 587), one can readily see that man, who represents God and possesses His divine characteristics by reflection, is occupied now and continually. As there is no lack of action, no idleness, in Mind, there can be none for man, through whom God's qualities are eternally expressed. As one ceases to believe the erroneous conditions which seem to be prevalent and instead accepts the true facts of his being, he will experience them. He will no longer believe he is out of work or overworked.

The work of understanding God implies putting into practice the qualities which reflect Him—manifest His nature—for one understands only what he can utilize. It is well to bear in thought that the most menial task may offer the same opportunity for expressing spiritual qualities as does the most prominent and responsible position. False pride, which is not a characteristic of the divine nature, must be set aside. Meekness and willingness to serve mankind in whatever capacity, as opportunity presents itself, are essential. Jesus, whose career was the humblest, and yet the mightiest and most extensive in blessing the world through his understanding of God, illustrated this fact when he washed his disciples' feet and said to them: "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you. Verily, verily, I say unto you, the servant is not greater than his lord."

This exemplification of lowly service which our Way-shower performed puts a new construction upon work, and plainly indicates that the most humble task should not be considered beneath anyone, but, on the contrary, as dignified, and of great value when the spirit of unselfed love prompts it. None of Jesus' acts were for selfish gain. They all show the greatest consideration for the welfare of others and express God's loving care for His children. Jesus' deeds reveal the right understanding of God which He had in unlimited degree; and his followers, as they apprehend this right idea of God, express it to their fellow men. Truly, herein is work for all, with compensation far beyond human expectation.

At the Chess Table

By Willard H. Mutchler.

The first appearance of chess master Israel A. Horowitz in Washington convinced the local fans that advance notices with respect to his prowess were by no means exaggerated. Horowitz last Tuesday encountered 21 opponents in simultaneous play at the Jewish Community Center, and before a large gathering vanquished 15 outright and agreed to draws with 6. Horowitz has not lost a single game in any of his last eight simultaneous performances.

The audience was furnished with plenty of excitement on at least three of the boards, where the opposition consisted of G. E. Bishop, Martin C. Stark, and L. H. Mugridge. Bishop's game was a wide open one for both players and in the midst of its most crucial moment Bishop committed an oversight, with the aid of the unwanted attentions of a few overzealous onlookers. The younger Stark's game appears elsewhere in this column, where readers may themselves discover how it all took place. Mugridge, who also engaged in complications, emerged minus the exchange. The situation was one of those peculiar ones in which Horowitz, possessed of a R and P found it impossible to win against a Kt and P, and a draw resulted. C. C. Bettinger and W. K. Wimsatt, sr., were others among the strongest players in this section who obtained draws. William E. Bryant, whose game appears below; John A. Davis, and E. R. Shepard also emerged with draws. On the remaining boards Horowitz won with relative ease.

With I. S. Turover arranging for its public chess activities, the Jewish Community Center bids fair to even excel this year the exhibitions it staged last season. Following World Champion Alekhine and Horowitz will be United States Champion Frank J. Marshall, who has not made a public appearance here for several years. Marshall's exhibition is scheduled during the first week in December. Board fees have again been set at $1 and reservations should be made by telephoning I. S. Turover at District 6796 or writing him at 3909 Jocelyn street northwest. It has also tentatively been decided to exact a small fee from spectators

Capital City Notes.

The club championship tournament at the Capital City Chess Cluo is now well under way. At this writing Martin C. Stark is proving his worth by leading the field with three consecutive victories, scored over Matheson, Jeffers and Bishop. Mugridge, occupying the runner-up position, defeated Weeks and Jeffers and lost to Matheson. Bishop has a victory to his credit over Matheson, and Jeffers won his partie with Weeks. The standing:

	W.	L.		W.	L.
M. C. Stark	3	0	E. L. Jeffers	1	2
L. H. Mugridge	2	1	J. Matheson	1	2
G. E. Bishop	1	1	E. M. Weeks	0	2

Bishop recenly engaged in a friendly little match with District Tournament Champion Vladimir Sournin, which the latter won after a hard struggle by a score of 2 to 1 and 1 draw. The University of Virginia is to engage the Johns Hopkins University in a chess match by radio in the near future.

Solutions to Problems.

The key to No. 553, two-mover by Eugene B. Cook, is Q—Kt2. Among those sending in solutions were Jacob Frech, Fred T. Hafelfinger, Tom Frydell and Henry M. Ward.

The K on KR3 was, of course, a white one instead of a black one, as diagrammed. However, 1 PxB(Q or B) is defeated by the black P's queening.

Jacob Frech writes: "Problem 553 generates about 40,000 series. Its relevant syllogistic middle term is: A problem in which white can force one of the following only quickest forced mate series: 1 Q—Kt2; 2 Q—Q4 or Kt4 or 5 or B—Q4 or K7 or Kt(B)—Q3 or Kt3. 1 Q—Kt7 is a near-key, as only 1 . . . P—R8(Kt) defeats it."

With respect to No. 551 by P. H. Williams, which should have been numbered No. 552, we intend to search back in the records to see if by any chance it was originally misprinted.

Problem No. 554.

Hockey Team Proves Ability Against Scotch

Americans' 4-to-5 Match at Glasgow Forebodes Woe for England.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

With the United States Touring Field Hockey Team (By Mail), Belfast, Oct. 27.—One might think that a national team, two months on tour, with 18 matches played, would be a hardened unit. Not so the American field hockey team. One week in Scotland has wrought drastic changes—internal and external.

Ireland welcomed the team on the dock this morning and found America's players replete with a new line-up, a new intimacy with pride's coming before a fall and, most impressive of all, new overcoats.

In the matter of line-up the team would suggest that friends at home glance back at the news flash of the Ulster match of October 28 and look at it in a new light.

Starting from right wing, the line against Ulster had Suzanne Cross, Helen Howe, Virginia Bourquardez, Virginia Vanderbeck and Barbara Strebeigh, all of Philadelphia, save Bourquardez, of New York. Cross and Vanderbeck alone are in their proper positions. Howe, right inner, has been playing wing. Bourquardez, center forward, made the team as right inner. Strebeigh is a half back.

A Defeat and a Change.

This was the result of three matches in Scotland. The first, against the 1931 Scottish touring team, commented upon last week, was a dazzling victory. The second, against All-Scotland, in its second half was impressive to the point of splendor. The third, against the East of Scotland, was a dismissal defeat.

It was decided a shake-up was necessary. The forward line shift resulted. Behind the new front-rank quintet Frances Pierce, of Boston, was assigned to the left full back post in place of Barbara Black, of New York.

Including even last week's brilliant defeat of the Scottish touring team at St. Andrews October 18, the match against All-Scotland, second of the three, played last Saturday, October 21, was one of the most encouraging displays of the tour.

The All-Scottish line-up, met that day at Glasgow, is the one that defeated All-England last year, 2-1. These particular players in purple are the first who have ever beaten England. Scotland rings still with the memory.

Last Saturday America lost to that Scottish eleven by one point, 4-5. It was defeat, but at the same time, a success, for America stepped into the company of England.

That contest, on top of the touring team triumph, was due cause for pride. Four days later came the match against the East District of Scotland, on the high-hill game grounds of St. Georges School, Edinburgh, and the fall.

One thousand persons braved the fury of Scotland's first cold snap to see the match. That was a comparatively small audience, however.

There was no call for nervousness at Edinburg in meeting the East. There had been 4,000 at Glasgow to see Scotland vs. America, and the later match was against a district team. There was only frosty discomfiture for the hands of players who didn't keep up to the pace, or were not properly used. Yet the Old Blue line-up of that day went down, 1-3 in the first half, 0-3 in the second, to a 1-6 defeat.

Strain of Tour Apparent.

Vanderbeck scored the one goal through her own hard work in breaking through heavy opposition from near the center line. Anne Townsend has never been faster or surer in the tour matches. But on the whole the strain of touring took toll. No team can travel through eight weeks and keep all 18 matches at par. Ulster, in Ireland, meets a juggled line-up. After that the team trusts it will return to normal and better.

The match against the all-Scottish players, the climax before the fall, may, by the end of the tour, turn out to be the second best match of all 23, postulating that the Americans are in good form when they meet all-England. They played a better game as a whole against the Scottish 1931 touring team, but in the face of the opposition of the team that conquered England the 4 goals to 5 against all-Scotland were the best earned of the tour.

In the first half Scotland had an edge of speed and better distribution of passes with which to hold the whip hand. Playing at full strength, the Purple eleven had managed three goals, one in the first three minutes of play and the other two in flash succession after 20 minutes, before Bourquardez cracked the ball through for a surprise goal and America's first score.

American Team Rallies.

At the opening of the all-Scotland second half the Americans lagged two goals behind, 1-3. True to form, they won the second half, 3-2. It was no walkaway in the remotest sense of the word, but they dominated the play and kept Scotland's goal under repeated threat. By the way, the Scots were tiring at the end. If there had been 10 minutes more of play, it would have been an American victory.

Nan Scott, well-remembered Scottish right inner of the 1931 tour, succeeded in making the Purple's first long scrimmage raise their lead to 4-1, but the American answer was a goal from Vanderbeck and another from Wiener, closing the margin down to 4-3.

E. W. Herriot, fast Scottish left inner, who had scored both the second and third goals of the first half, climaxed Scotland's extended effort at retaliation with a smashing angle shot beyond Frances Elliot's reach, and the Purple total reached 5. With the time growing short and America pressing mercilessly, Anne Townsend snapped from her helm position at center to take advantage of a Scottish penalty corner and crack an untouchable shot past Mrs. Clelland. Knit to a live-wire pitch of fast pass work, nothing could have stopped the Americans from conquest save the whistle, which did, with the score still 4-5.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

High Altitudes.

There are some advantages in living in a high altitude and, likewise, some disadvantages. Our great centers of population have generally had their locations determined by transportation facilities, and in the development of such facilities the possibilities of water transportation have dominated the development, for one reason or another. This means that our great population centers are located either at sea level or less than a thousand feet above that level. However, Denver is a mile above the sea, and a large population lives there. And besides the population of Denver there are several hundred thousand people in America who live at altitudes in excess of 1 mile.

Speaking in general terms, the people who live at these high altitudes—some living more than 2 miles above sea level—are neither healthier nor less healthy than those who live near the sea. They live just as long, but no longer. They are just as capable of work and no more so. If the altitude has advantages or disadvantages from the health standpoint, the human animal has a satisfactory capacity for adjustment when given time.

In the early days of the automobile one type of machine was popular in Denver, Colorado Springs, and other places located in high altitudes because it worked better than the others in their air. The tenderfoot, driving up from the low country, would reach a level at which his machine of another make would fail to work. If he had been forewarned, he got out, tinkered a bit, and changed his feed of the gas, after which his troubles were minor.

In the Andes there is a copper mine located at a level higher than the top of Pikes Peak. The men who live and work there are reasonably efficient. They are somewhat prone to one disease found at high altitudes, but to only one. On the other hand, the people who travel into this mining town from sea level are quite apt to get sick when they pass a certain level, even though they are sitting still and relaxed in a railway coach.

The point to all of this is that aside from the advantages and disadvantages of high altitudes for those who live there, there are certain other considerations that result from rapid change. Therefore, when considering whether a given person would be helped or harmed by changing to a different altitude, we need to make a distinction between vacations spent in high altitudes and permanent locations there.

Again, the type of work the individual is to carry on may be an important factor. An asthmatic, or anyone else who is short-winded but who can still do moderately heavy work at a low altitude, may be entirely incapacitated for hard work during his first year of residence in an altitude 5,000 feet or more above sea level.

There are no appreciable differences in living conditions due to altitudes of less than 500 feet.

And, finally, mental reactions often play a part. Men riding in railroad cars in the olden days not infrequently had difficulty in breathing when the train was passing some place advertised as "the highest point in the road" or "sky line pass." Not so now.

In No Danger.

V. G. writes:

1. I have been told that it is possible to contract hydrophobia by coming in contact with a mad dog, even though one is not bitten. Is this true?

2. I do house-to-house selling and every day come in contact with a large number of dogs who think it is their duty to smell me and my samples. Of course, if I were bitten at any time I would know it and could take treatment, but I wonder if there is any danger of contracting the disease from some dog which has it in the early stages, with whom I might come in contact. What is your opinion?

Reply.

1. No.

2. You are in no danger. None of the conditions of infection are present as you describe things. These are: A bite which breaks through the skin, the bite of a dog having rabies.

Rabies in a dog can be diagnosed by a veterinarian. The diagnosis can be confirmed by laboratory examinations.

"Coffee Heart."

M. M. A. G. writes: Is there such a disease as coffee heart?

Reply.

Not exactly. In nervous or irritable heart it is claimed that the symptoms are made worse by drinking coffee to excess.

The Drama Reawakens With Pola Negri in "A Trip to Pressburg," at the National

Newcomers to the Cinema and Another Hardly Better Known

IT is disturbing to note, over an otherwise comparatively tranquil and unruffled week-end, that those who should be most diligently engaged in conserving their artistic reputations are permitting themselves to refer to Mr. Max Baer as the "male Mae West."

So far as his professional activities have fallen under the observation of this clinic, Mr. Baer has done nothing to deserve this opprobrium.

To denominate Mr. Baer as the "male Mae West" is, of course, tantamount to limiting his endowments for the gentle art of Thespis to a pair of rolling hips, a slinky walk and a peculiar insolence in hissing the fetid line, "Whyn't ya come up and see me sometime?" between clenched teeth.

Within the knowledge of this department, Mr. Baer possesses none of these shady virtues.

But, quite obviously, he does possess other qualifications for eminence in the theater no less positive of a quick apprehension of public favor. Not all of them are physical.

Much to the surprise of the great majority, Mr. Baer has authentic color both in and out of the ring.

* * * *

UNTIL the prodigious Signor Primo Carnera heaves his Brobdingnagian bulk upon the scene in "The Prize Fighter and the Lady," one's most vivid impression of Max Baer is that he wears the broadest set of shoulders ever bestowed upon the likes of man.

It requires but the contemplation of a moment, however, to discover that Mr. Baer, the actor, has much more to commend him to the connoisseur of the art of the theater than mere breadth of back.

One becomes almost immediately conscious of a smile that lies dangerously close to being dimpled—something that would never do for a world's heavyweight contender!

And one becomes aware, too, that in his gentler moments of romance, as well as in the turbulent intervals of his pugilistic encounters, Mr. Baer's graceful movements are unencumbered by too many hands or feet, although in all truth it must be said that he may be just a shade pigeon-toed—something that is often imparted with some difficulty to young ring aspirants as part of the proper stance for the successful consummation of the delicate art of beak-busting.

But it is in the reading of his lines, the timing of his speeches, and the nice coordination of action with the spoken word that Mr. Baer does most to bewilder his observers.

Here is a young man evidently gifted with an instinctive sense of theater; an amiable, poised and reasonably polished leading man, where all that had been expected was a thick-tongued and punch-drunk bruiser with the drawing-room graces of a truck horse, and the manner of speech of a stevedore!

Perhaps, after all, a part, at least, of the agreeable impression Mr. Baer makes in his first film assignment may be traced to the fact that in "The Prize Fighter and the Lady" there is no drawing room and the standards of gentlemanly conduct are strictly those of the speakeasy and the rubbing table. In circles more remote from the social environment to which he is inured by both habit and profession Mr. Baer might not seem so preeminently sportdom's gift to the esthetes.

Mr. Stepin Fetchit, it will be recalled, was similarly acclaimed for the unique comedy sense he betrayed as the living monument of the equatorial lethargy of his race in "Hearts in Dixie," an epic of Negro indolence. Master Fetchit never again found himself provided with opportunities so completely within the lazy scope of his talents and inclinations, and so faded quickly from public view.

So it may be with Mr. Baer. Too much jubilance should not be expended upon the happy circumstance that Mr. Baer has not revealed flagrant weaknesses in a role to which he was born.

He may yet encounter one in which he will.

IT is noteworthy that a week prolific in its contribution of new personalities to the cinema does not limit its largesse to a single film or the male gender.

At the Rialto, Washington's acquaintanceship is being renewed with a young actress of extraordinary charm of both person and method.

Much has already been said in these columns of the gracious qualities of beauty, bearing and voice which Miss Margaret Sullavan brings to the interpretation of whatever role she essays on either the stage or the screen, but it was scarcely to be listed among the Capital's definite expectations that this talented young Virginian should bring such depth of understanding, such quiet power or such profoundly moving revelations of young motherhood's unplumbed wells of devotion as she contributes to the distinction of Universal's pretentious production of "Only Yesterday."

That Miss Sullavan salvages her role on the side of a thin plausibility is to be attributed almost entirely to her own proficiency as an actress of warmth, intelligence and authority, for "Only Yesterday" is based upon a presumption of the almost grotesque fallibility of man. It is only Miss Sullavan's intensely realistic performance of the role of the young mother, and John Boles' discreetly repressed support, as the father of her small son, that redeem this otherwise admirable picture from an abject and apochryphal absurdity.

That Miss Sullavan is able to lend credence to a figure in the play which in less skillful hands would be made to seem just a little ridic-a Washington favorite, who returns to the local screen at the Rialto Theater this week, opposite Margaret Sullavan in "Only Yesterday," one of the more thoughtful of the year's major film productions.

POLA NEGRI,
exotic emotional star of stage and screen, who is making her debut in drama in the English tongue in "A Trip to Pressburg," successful Viennese play, to be seen for the first time in the Capital at the National Theater, beginning tomorrow night.

Pola Negri at National in a Viennese Play

Lee Shubert will present the glamorous Pola Negri and a distinguished cast of 50 in the well-known European success, "A Trip to Pressburg," at the National Theater for a week beginning tomorrow night, with Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Written by Leo Perutz, it was first produced by Max Reinhardt at the Reinhardt Theater in Vienna three years ago and was widely heralded in the European press as a success. Harold Johnsrud and Philip Dunning have made the adaptation and George Abbott has directed the production.

Vienna is one of the most colorful and gayest cities in the Old World and it is here the action of the play takes place. "A Trip to Pressburg" is undeniably drama, in the profound sense of the word, distinctive and absorbing. The story is that of a young man's love for a woman he believes to be of aristocratic birth and wealth. Such a person it has always been his ambition to meet, but the meeting sweeps on to a fatal conclusion.

Set against this personal story is the impersonal gayety and glamour of a cafe in Vienna which serves to bring into sharp relief the struggles and motivations of the several characters who are the protagonists in the major drama.

The title of the play, "A Trip to Pressburg," is the key to the irony that prevails throughout the action. In Vienna the term has a sinister connotation, meaning that a person is "through" . . . finished, and no longer capable of carrying on with his work. This is the general meaning of the term. In "A Trip to Pressburg" the title refers more pertinently to a woman of easy virtue who is returning to "Pressburg," where she may find rest and comfort and be taken care of by members of her own tragic profession.

There are ten scenes, presenting many mechanical problems, resulting in special stages. Throughout the play has glamour and that intangible thing called "atmosphere."

At the Play in New York

By Mark Barron.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11 (AP).—Life began again at 50 for Alla Nazimova, although this Russian actress of 54 has lived through half a dozen full careers.

As a star of the Moscow Art Theater she came to this country and became the leading exponent of Ibsen drama, although she could hardly speak English. She was a vampire star in the old silent movies, and then it was thought that the sun of Nazimova was due for an eclipse.

But the actress triumphed and she was enthusiastically hailed at 50 for her performance in "The Cherry Orchard." Her appearances in "A Month in the Country" and "Mourning Becomes Electra" won her new huzzahs, and now she is back on Broadway in a distinct acting triumph, a Polish drama called "Doctor Monica."

"DOCTOR MONICA" has a cast only of three women—Mme. Nazimova, Gale Sondergaard and Beatrice de Neergaard. As a play it must be classed as a minor effort, but Mme. Nazimova's performance in the leading role elevates it to as dramatic an evening as one can find on Broadway at the moment.

FLORENCE REED, who played in "The Shanghai Gesture," is back on Broadway in an old-time melodramatic thriller, "Thoroughbred." It has all the old hokum of those ancient tear-jerkers where the horse wins the big race and saves the family homesead, but is treated and acted in such a light manner that it becomes an evening of intriguing entertainment.

Miss Reed is excellent, as are Lillian Emerson, social register actress, and Claudia Morgan, daughter of Ralph Morgan.

Koussevitzky's First Program Here on Nov. 15

Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony will be a feature of the program to be presented here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of its three visits to Washington, for a concert in Constitution Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 15, at 4:40.

All music lovers remember the Beethoven Festival given by Koussevitzky and his celebrated orchestra in its fiftieth anniversary season three years ago, of which the "Eroica" Symphony was an outstanding success. This symphony was inspired by the early exploits of Beethoven's contemporary, Napoleon Bonaparte, in whom Beethoven, the platonic idealist, saw the liberator of mankind from the tyranny of oppressive rulers.

When the composer, on completing his score, learned that Napoleon was abusing his power and becoming still another tyrant, he destroyed the dedication in anger, but the great symphony remained no less noble for having been inspired by a beneficent military leader who did not exist. The slow movement is the greatest funeral march ever conceived, and the finale an exultant torrent of rhythm and melody.

When Schindler, Beethoven's friend, asked the composer in the course of conversation for his favorits among the nine symphonies, Beethoven mentioned the "Eroica."

A novelty of interest on the program is "Divertisements on a Pastoral Theme," by Gabriel Pierne, which is to have its first American hearing in Boston this week. The French composer aims in this music frankly to entertain in a series of variations, one of which he calls "Cortege Blues."

The program will also include the prelude to Moussorgsky's "Khovanchina," which is, in effect, a miniature tone poem depicting the coming of dawn over the Red Square in Moscow. It is a rare gem by the celebrated composer of "Boris Godounov." Richard Strauss' humorous tone poem, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," is also upon the program.

Letter by Dickens Is Found in Old Book

On thumbing through an 80-year-old historical volume which he had just purchased, Stephen Roberts, director of "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," recently found a two-page letter written by Charles Dickens to his plumber, Mr. Aldridge. The letter, more than 60 years old, is estimated to be worth more than $100.

Noted Actress in Fine Plays Comes Soon to the National

EVA LE GALLIENNE brings two of the finest plays in her large repertoire to the National Theater for the week beginning Monday night, November 20. "Alice in Wonderland" will be the bill on Monday night and for the last half of the week, starting Thursday night.

In "Alice in Wonderland" Eva Le Gallienne and the original company will be seen in the roles made famous by Carroll, with Josephine Hutchinson as Alice. "Alice in Wonderland" was first presented by Miss Le Gallienne on December 11 of last season at the Civic Repertory Theater. In January Miss Le Gallienne transferred "Alice" to the New Amsterdam Theater, where it played until the middle of May.

Of "Alice in Wonderland," John Mason Brown wrote in the New York Evening Post, "There is nothing like it on this island today. Nor has there been for years."

The adaptation of the Carroll story is by Eva Le Gallienne and Florida Friebus. For this production Richard Addinsell, the English composer, wrote a special musical score. The settings and costumes, designed by Irene Sharaff, are exact reproductions of the Tennial drawings.

In "Romeo and Juliet," which will be presented Tuesday night and Wednesday matinee and night, Eva Le Gallienne will be seen as Juliet, Richard Waring as Romeo, Donald Cameron as Mercuito, Leona Roberts as the nurse, Walter Beck as Capulet and Sayre Crawley as the Friar.

Miss Le Gallienne first appeared as Juliet in Philadelphia, April 8, 1930. It was said after this production, that "as an actress and director, Eva Le Gallienne stepped to the head of her profession. No such chorus of praise has arisen from critics over a Shakespearean production in recent memory."

The settings and costumes for this production are by Aline Bernstein and Tchaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" suite is used throughout the play.

In presenting Shakespeare's tragic love story and Carroll's masterpiece of humor, Miss Le Gallienne offers two plays greatly differing in subject but ranking as classics in English literature.

In the company this season there are, aside from Miss Le Gallienne, Josephine Hutchinson, Leona Roberts, Walter Beck, Donald Cameron, Sayre Crawley, Nelson Welch, Harold Moulton, Richard Waring, Landon Herrick, David Turk, Lester Scharff, Howard da Silva and others, most of whom have been with Miss Le Gallienne for years.

The Fairbanks Family Denies Expatriation

Despite newspaper reports, Douglas Fairbanks, sr., and Douglas Fairbanks, jr., have no intention of renouncing their American citizenship to become British subjects.

They are in London at the moment, but they are there on business, the business of making motion pictures, and when that business is completed they will return to the United States to continue to make pictures in this country.

Douglas, sr., recently gave a reception for the press in London, at which he outlined plans for himself and his son, but he made no statement concerning a contemplated British citizenship as carried in some American newspapers. British newspaper clippings of the reception made no mention of such a statement.

Following the tremendous reception given the British-made film, "The Private Life of Henry the VIII," in the United States, it is the opinion of motion picture leaders that the visit of Doug, sr., and Doug, jr., to England will be of great benefit to the industry on both sides of the Atlantic.

Exhibitors are looking forward to young Doug's first foreign-made film, tentatively called "Symphony in Purple," while, in "The Return of Don Juan," the elder Fairbanks is believed to have selected a vehicle that will meet with a welcome reception from both public and exhibitor.

Following the completion of these photoplays, father and son will star together in a "Zorro" story, and on completion of this program they will return to the United States.

The Fairbanks' pictures are to be released by United Artists.

So What?

Variety, the theatrical publication, said last week that Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks have adjusted their differences, and that there will be no divorce. Miss Pickford was quoted as saying that she will not sell Pickfair, her Hollywood home.

Speaker Guest Of Washington Acting Groups

A talk on the formation and program of the N. Y. Civic Repertory Theater will be given by Miss Mary Ward, of New York City, Tuesday evening of this week, November 14, at 8:15 o'clock in Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets northwest, under the joint auspices of the Drama Guild of Washington and the Pierce Hall players.

It is expected that Miss Ward will speak particularly of the forthcoming productions of "Romeo and Juliet" and "Alice in Wonderland" which Miss Le Gallienne will present in Washington the following week.

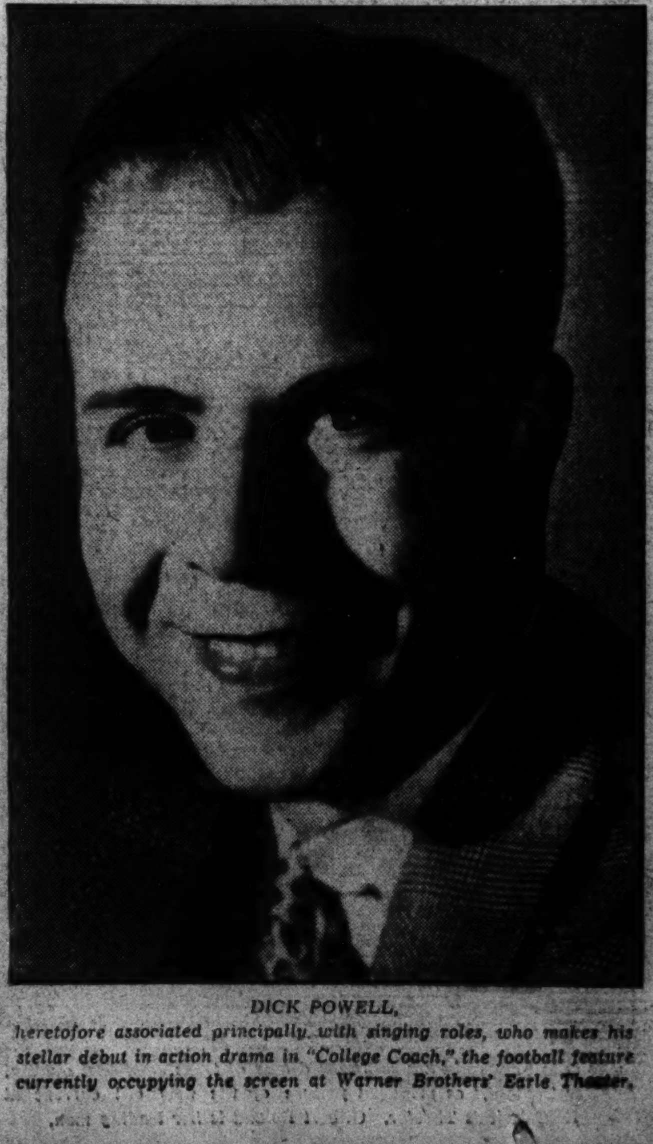
The program arranged by the Pierce Hall Players, who are the hosts of the occasion, will include a short piano concert by George Cornwell, of this city, and a demonstration by Robert Wick, of the Drama Guild, of a number of his own model stage settings, including those for the next guild production "Ned McCobb's Daughter," in December.

Edmund Evans, president of the Pierce Hall Players, will introduce Mrs. Grace Peters Johnson, of the Drama Guild, who will in turn introduce the honor guest and speaker of the evening.

Members of leading drama groups in the city are expected to attend this meeting.

No Periods, Commas In "Pageant" Script

Further indication that direction is an element of outstanding importance in motion pictures was demonstrated when the large cast of Marlene Dietrich's next picture, tentatively titled "Scarlet Pageant," received scripts that are singular void of punctuation and capital letters and that read like an effort by James Joyce or Gertrude Stein. When approached, Josef von Sternberg, director, refused to make an explanation of this phenomenon.



DICK POWELL,
heretofore associated principally with singing roles, who makes his stellar debut in action drama in "College Coach," the football feature currently occupying the screen at Warner Brothers' Earle Theater.

News and Comment Concerning Personalities and Events of Note in the Theater

Propinquity, It Seems, Is Not Of Much Value as Open Sesame

IT is almost an adage that Hollywood turns a cold shoulder to its native sons and daughters as motion picture talent until they have been afield, usually to New York, to make a name in Broadway plays and stock.

It was so with Victor Jory, Alaskan born but a resident of Pasadena, within 20 miles of Hollywood, almost from baby days. Several years in stock and leads in such plays as "Berkeley Square" in New York had to precede his advent in pictures under a Fox Film contract, where in a twelvemonth he has made 14 pictures and a reputation that puts him in the front rank of young players heading for stardom.

Harvey Stephens is another. As an all-round athlete he was a three-letter man at Hollywood High School, gaining his schooling so close to the studios that he could actually see some of them from his classrooms. But he could not get a chance when he tried to play in pictures. In New York he gained theatrical prominence, went on the road, and ended his journey at his starting point, Hollywood, with a contract that promises him a great future under the Fox banner.

There are many such instances. Rosemary Ames, however, sets a new precedent. She left the country before she gained prominence enough to gain entrance to the studios.

Schooled in California, Washington, D. C., and Chicago, the dignified appearing and rather tall (she is 5 feet 6 inches) blonde Miss Ames began dramatic studies under Walter Hartwig at Peterboro, N. H., then sailed for London and registered in the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts.

While studying in London she heard of an understudy part in a play Raymond Massey was putting on, reported to him, fibbed about some vague stock experience in America and landed the job.

She played the part of the young girl in "Late Night Final," the English title of "Five Star Final," and appeared in "See Naples and Die" and "The Holmses of Baker Street."

This start gave her an opportunity in New York and from the stage there she was drafted for motion picture work when Fox signed her to a contract.

Newcomers to the Cinema

ulous is proof positive that here is an actress whose capabilities are of genuinely stellar dimensions.

It only remains for more congenial casting to add to palpably rich emotional endowments the vivacious humor of a keen native wit that "Only Yesterday" completely and brazenly ignores.

* * * *

IN striking contrast with Miss Sullavan's ingenuous cinema debut in "Only Yesterday" is Pola Negri's first appearance in drama in English in "A Trip to Pressburg," redeeming the National Theater to its original uses tomorrow evening.

Miss Negri comes to us a woman sophisticated, cosmopolitan; an artiste in several media with an exotic and colorful zest for living. And it is not any mere kindly gesture of a whimsical destiny that has raised this brilliant actress to the rarified heights she now occupies—save as that destiny has been created by her own steely determination, iron will and an eventual shrewdness that has directed means toward the accomplishment of definite ends.

Pola Negri's life, if common report is to be credited, has been packed with drama since the days of her early girlhood, when, as Appolonia Chalupez, she watched soldiers batter down the door of her home in search of her father, who, unknown to her and her mother at that time, already had been captured and exiled to Siberia—as was apt to happen to any native-born Hungarian in Lippnau, Poland, who joined the volunteers in a revolt against oppression.

The course of her early girlhood traced its way then through the Countess Platen's fashionable boarding school in Warsaw, where she saw her first play and the ambition was born to be an actress; to enrollment in the Imperial School of Ballet in St. Petersburg, Russia, at the age of 15, and finally, in 1917, to Berlin and an engagement in Max Reinhardt's production of "Sumurun."

It was this inauguration of what may be termed her European career that led in time directly to her association with Ernst Lubitsch and Emil Jannings in a group of significant motion pictures which, as was inevitably to have been expected, brought them to America and the later fame that comprises an important chapter in the annals of the native cinema.

Even in appearance, Miss Negri is distinctly continental. The broad cheek bones, the long, full gray eyes which look directly at you, as she speaks or listens; the olive skin and heavy, dark hair, all denote her Slavic ancestors.

The face is curiously mobile. Strong, with a tender mouth, it suggests moments of a wild, uncontrolled temper; moments of shrewd business deliberation, moments of grace, but never of much repose. For, stirring in the eyes is a sort of restlessness, mostly of an intellectual kind—plans, decisions, flights, not of fancy so much as ambition. She is alert, intense, curious and human.

Much in her life that is attributed to temperament is, rather, impatience that fulfillment drags so tardily in the wake of exalted vision and untrammeled aspiration.

A glimpse of the real Pola Negri would be worth much more than merely "A Trip to Pressburg." But that is a privilege that is vouchsafed only a favored few.

To most of America, the star of "Passion" is still a remote and cryptic figure—and even Time doesn't seem to be able to do much about it.

Janet Richards.

Miss Janet Richards, tomorrow morning, at the second talk in her course on "Affairs Political and International," will continue the discussion of the vital questions of the hour, both home and abroad.

Press reactions to the conferences between the Department of State and Soviet Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff will be given special attention, followed by further mention of Hitlerism.

The talks are given every Monday morning at 11 o'clock in the Willard room of the Willard Hotel.

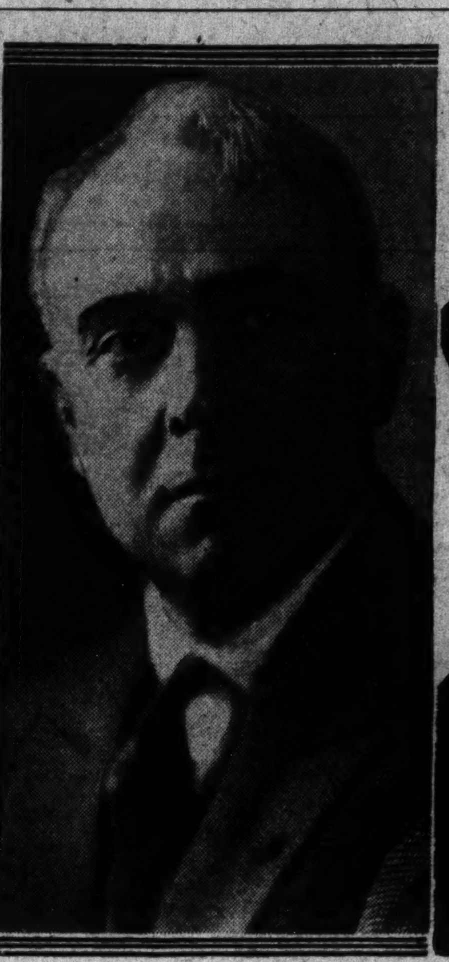
To Talk Tonight.

Miss Mary Ward, one of the members of Eva Le Gallienne's Civic Repertory Theater group, will be in Washington to speak on the subject "In the Interest of Good Theater" tonight. Miss Ward will give her talk in the auditorium of the Gunston Hall School, 1906 Florida avenue northwest.

She will be presented to her audience by Mrs. William Channing Johnson, head of the dramtic department of the school. The program will begin at 8:30 p. m.

CONSTANCE BENNETT, who is to be seen in a new screen drama of tense emotional quality, "After Tonight," as principal feature of the new bill current at RKO-Keith's Theater. Gilbert Roland is her leading man.

With Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" and Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland" as her vehicles, Eva Le Gallienne will pay Washington her annual visit, at the National, next week.



Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will conduct the first of a series of concerts by that noted organization in Constitution Hall on Wednesday afternoon.

When the Gayety Theater inaugurates its new policy of presenting road show attractions this afternoon, a stellar feature of the "New Ideas of 1933" will be Gloria Lee, pictured above.

A Gentleman of the Old School Adheres to the Old-Time Music

IT seems hardly possible that it is 50 years since Milton Aborn became identified with the presentation of Gilbert and Sullivan operas, and that he is the same impresario who two decades ago assumed the Herculean task of managing the destinies of the Century Opera Company at the massive Century Theater in New York City; but, like Tennyson's Brook, "men may come and men may go, but he goes on forever."

This Milton Aborn has certainly secured what Ponce de Leon failed to find: The elixir of Youth. Here is a dynamic personage bordering upon the Biblical three-score years and ten, with a figure as straight as the proverbial ramrod and a memory for dates, figures and incidents that is positively uncanny. He can direct any of the very many operas he has produced within the past 50 years without referring to a manuscript; he knows every note in the score, every bit of business and every step introduced by the ensemble, and, if necessity requires, he can participate in an ensemble number and give a graceful expression of the steps he wishes introduced.

This native son of the Golden West was born in Marysville, Calif., and is a graduate of the same school of practical experience that gave the stage David Warfield, David Belasco, Jefferson D'Angelis and others.

Coming East in the 80s he was engaged as comedian of Keith's Little Opera Company, at the old Bijou Theater, Boston; from acting he devoted his abilities to stage directing and producing for the late B. F. Keith. After eight years congenial affiliation with that great showman, Mr. Aborn decided to embark upon the managerial field and founded the Aborn Light Opera Company, an organization that is still in existence.

In 1902 the Aborn English Opera Company was launched and successfully operated for over 20 years. In 1913 the Aborn Century Opera Company, at the Century Theater, was inaugurated and profitably conducted until the World War broke out.

Mr. Aborn asserts that at one time there were ten Aborn opera companies touring in the United States and Canada simultaneously, with casts that included several singers who afterward became prominently associated with the Metropolitan Opera Company.

This amazing personality is an indefatigable worker; in fact, he is in harness from 15 to 18 hours a day and enjoys every minute of it.

At 9 every morning he is in his office, at 11 he is in the theater, personally supervising every detail of every production offered under his banner; directs all rehearsals, hears each chorus applicant and passes on every one individually.

"I suppose you want to ask me what most interviewers want to know," said Mr. Aborn on the stage of his home theater. "Why don't I produce new musical works, pieces written by the post-war generation? Well! I know the answer. Why should I? I think the operettas of yesterday are much more tuneful and everlastingly beautiful than those that are being written today.

"I never get tired of 'The Mikado,' 'The Gondoliers,' 'The Pirates of Penzance,' 'Patience,' 'Iolanthe,' 'The Yeoman of the Guard,' 'Pinafore' and 'Ruddigore,' all Gilbert and Sullivan gems, to say nothing of Victor Herbert's delightful operas. I've lived with them and loved them ever since I became part of the theater, and I guess I'll go on doing so as long as there are audiences willing to come to see them and agree with me that they are the height of enjoyment and entertainment in our theater of today.

"Conditions may have changed in the geography of the world, science has advanced, politics has been revolutionized, but man, in the generic sense, is impressed by the same impulses of the heart today as a century ago.

"The tempo of music has changed, but the fundamental principle remains the same; therefore, my contention has always been that as long as you give the public good music, clean, wholesome lyrics and an interesting story, light, comic and grand opera will always live.

"The success of Gilbert and Sullivan lies in the fact that the music is tuneful, rhythmic, and colorful, and the story always clean, sane and humorous—sometimes sarcastic, sometimes satirical, but never hurtful to anybody. Therein lies their perpetual popularity."

Matinee Today Begins Gayety Policy Change

Starting with the matinee performance this afternoon and continuing all week, the Gayety Theater will abandon its policy of stock burlesque and sponsor the Wilner Wheel traveling road shows described as "glorified burlesque."

The show that has been selected to inaugurate the change is one of the most successful on the wheel, "Newd Ideas of 1933," a merry melange of mirth and melody, featuring 30 beautiful girls and starring Kay Barry, exotic interpreter of the terpsichorean art.

Others in the star-studded cast include Harry Seymour, Jack Rosen, Jess Mack, Howard Padden, Gloria Lee, Jean Lee, Gladys Smith, Betty Novak and the three Bates sisters.

The entire production was staged and produced by Allan Gilbert.

Hollywood Has Part Waiting Reno Widow

Adrienne Ames, soon to return to Hollywood from a divorce holiday in Reno, will draw as her first screen part a featured role with George Raft in "The Trumpet Blows." Leading feminine role probably will be played by Frances Drake, screen newcomer. Raoul Walsh will direct "The Trumpet Blows," with Jack LaRue and Roscoe Karns also in the cast.

Heifetz to Be Second Dorsey Concert Star

The Sunday afternoon recital season, which opened so auspiciously at Constitution Hall last Sunday under Mrs. Dorothy Hogkin Dorsey's aegis, with Lawrence Tibbett as the artist of the day, brings us another great musical figure in Jascha Heifetz, the wizard of the violin, who appears at Constitution Hall next Sunday afternoon, November 19, at 4 o'clock in one of the most interesting programs he has ever offered to the Capital.

It may be recalled that Heifetz gave his opening New York recital of the season just a few weeks ago and the program he will offer here next Sunday is substantially the same as the one he played in Carnegie Hall, except that he has substituted Wieniawski's gay and lilting Scherzo-Tarantelle for his own transcription of Bach's sarabande, gavotte and musette which his New York audience heard.

Heifetz will open his program with the fragrant and lovely daintiness of the Schubert Sonatina in G minor (Op. 137, No. 3) in which Heifetz's sensitive notation of style, sentiment and period were most marked, according to his New York critics.

Another interesting number will be Richard Strauss' sonata for violin and piano—the relatively unfamiliar sonata in E flat major (Opus 18)—which was written about the time of Strauss' first tone poem but which antedated such robust Straussiana as "Don Juan" and "Tod und Verklaerung." The harmonic structure of the piece is suggestive of the coming master, but, in Mr. Gilman's opinion, it is not "meat for fiddling youngsters."

These two numbers will require the first half of Mr. Heifetz's program, and immediately after intermission he will offer us a concerto by Conus, Brahms' Hungarian Dance No. 20, the Wieniawski Scherzo-Tarantelle and two new numbers which will be given their first performance locally: Heifetz's own transcription of Albeniz's "El Puerto," obviously Spanish in nativity and doubtless the same in style, and Tedesco's transcription of Castelnuovo's "Alt-Wien."

Roxy's Protege To Wave Baton For Stokowski

The second concert of the four scheduled for Washington by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra will bring the popular conductor, Eugene Ormandy, on November 21, at 8:45 p. m. at Constitution Hall.

This young and popular conductor, who is regular conductor of the Minneapolis Orchestra, was born in Budapest, Hungary, in 1899.

In 1921 he came to the United States. A contract in his pocket, a tour guaranteed, Eugene Ormandy, violin in hand, high hopes in his heart, came to this country. On arriving here he found that his manager was richer in promises than in money, and that he had come for nothing.

Broke, far from home, unable to talk a word of English, Ormandy took the first position he could find, a post as violinist in the last chair of the string section at the New York Capitol Theater. Five days after he joined the orchestra S. L. Rothafel (Roxy), at that time director of the Capitol, called him into his office and, through an interpreter, gave Ormandy to understand that he had been made concert master.

The next step was a major orchestra. Eugene Ormandy's first opportunity came when he conducted the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra for Anna Duncan at the stadium concerts.

Ormandy is married to Steffy Goldner, the well-known concert harpist.

On November 21 Ormandy will open his concert at Constitution Hall with one of the most beautiful symphonies ever written, that of Brahms, No. 1 in C minor.

A Master Chef Takes Command At Night Club

Pierre Searby, famous Midwestern chef, has accepted the position of chief chef at the popular Club Michel, No. 1 Thomas Circle, Walter Von Herbulis announced yesterday.

Mr. Searby has already assumed his new duties and Club Michel patrons are assured of a treat, whether they order a sandwich or a meal. This well-known chef is a famous culinary artist whose experience in the line of his chosen profession reads like a romance in a story book. His 30 years' experience in the kitchens of the country's most famous hostelries and clubs admirably equips him for the important position of cooking for particular Club Michel clientele.

Pierre's first experience in the domain of the "skillet" was gleaned at the ripe age of 7, when he donned the cook's apron to prepare the meals for his invalid mother.

"She was an excellent cook," Pierre says; "she taught me all that she knew and I haven't been out of a kitchen since."

Pierre received his later training under French, German and Italian chefs, who were famous for their cuisine. He has served as chef in dozens of well-known hotels and clubs, among which are the Morrison Hotel in Chicago, the largest hotel in the world; the Adolphus in Dallas, Tex.; the South Shore Country Club in Chicago; the Elks Club in New Orleans, the Eppley Hotel chain in Lincoln, Nebr., and numerous others in all section of the country.

Chef Searby knows just what the Washington diner prefers, having prepared food for the particular tastes of many famous persons in the Nation's Capital, including President Theodore Roosevelt, President William Howard Taft, Queen Marie of Roumania, William Jennings Bryan and the visiting Prince of Wales.

Although Pierre is an authority on French, German, Italian, Chinese and Mexican cuisine, he is a great believer in "American foods for Americans." Pierre points out that "tastes in food differ in each section of the country." In the South the most popular dish is fried chicken, with the flavor cooked "in" instead of "out."

Asked how he thought he was going to like cooking for night club guests, Pierre said that the use of cigarettes can ruin a good meal. "Smoking before the meals or during meals," according to Pierre, "so deadens the taste that it is impossible really to appreciate good food, and if one must smoke it should be done after the meal with coffee."

The delicious and inexpensive Club Michel dinners will become more popular than ever, with Pierre contributing his culinary artistry to the preparation of the food. Dinners are served nightly at the Club Michel from 6:30 to 9:30, with floor show atnd dancing to the rhythmic melodies of Harry Albert's famous Chantecler Orchestra.

A New Novelty Is on Tap Now At New Hangar

Billy Ersig, amazingly clever clarinetist-contortionist, whose ability to play his instrument while standing on his head and turning somersaults made him popular with last week's patrons at the Hangar Club, has been retained for a second week, heading a new supporting show.

The Stevens Sisters, singing, dancing—and generally goofy—comediennes, will carry on in any manner they see fit, providing the police don't close the show—or the patrons die of laughter.

Leaving the headwork to the sisters, Johnny Barnes will exercise his nimble feet in an extraordinary routine of tap and soft-shoe dancing.

Joan Moss, charming mistress of ceremonies, of course will preside, brightening her introductions with a couple of new arrangements of two of the newest songs.

Rhythm for the acts and the dinner-dancers will come from Charley Dawson's Musical Pilots.

International Opera Company Presents "Music for the Masses" in Washington

9 Grand Opera Performances To Be Presented Nov. 19-26

Impresario Maurice Frank Has Long Record in Field as Pioneer Producer of Opera on Large Scale for People's Enjoyment.

Carmela Ponselle, Metropolitan mezzo-soprano, who is to sing the roles of Carmen and Amneris in Washington with the International Opera Company during the 8-day engagement from November 19 to November 26 in the Washington Auditorium, is an enthusiastic supporter of Impresario Maurice Frank in his endeavors to bring grand opera within the means of everyone who wishes to enjoy it. Her appearance here is due primarily to her interest in his work.

"For ten years or more," says Miss Ponselle, "Mr. Frank has been waging his vigorous campaign against high prices for operatic productions. His efforts deserve the backing of all who are interested in making the United States a thoroughly musical Nation.

"I have cooperated with him before, particularly in his production of 'Aida' at the Polo Grounds in New York, and I am glad of this opportunity to help him again as an artistic collaborator."

As Boy Failed to Hear Melba.

Maurice Frank, whose working motto is "The works of the masters belong to the masses," attributes the germinal idea of his undertaking to an incident of his childhood. "I was a boy living down on the East Side in New York," he explains, "and I already had learned to love music. One stormy winter night I had 15 nickels in my pocket—from selling papers—and I wanted to hear Melba, who was singing at the Metropolitan.

"I trudged all the way uptown with the snow beating in my face and sifting down my collar. I didn't get into the Metropolitan—not with 15 nickels. I was disappointed and humiliated, but I forgot my own troubles when I saw a little girl standing under a gas lamp and weeping bitterly because she didn't have money enough to hear Melba. Right then and there I made up my mind that if I could ever do anything to help children hear great artists, I would."

It was a long time before he could put his idea into practice, but he never relinquished it as he went about the business of making a livelihood. He grew to manhood and became an actor, then a stage director, and eventually a manager. At last he was in a position to let that idea of his express itself in action.

Complete Opera Broadcast.

In September, 1922, he began preparations for a large-scale production of "Aida" on Armistice Day in the Kingsbridge Armory, New York. He engaged the orchestra and chorus of the Metropolitan Opera, Conductor Giuseppe Bamboschek and a number of the Metropolitan stars under private contracts. The performance took place before an audience of 35,000, and in that audience were 5,000 crippled soldiers, 5,000 Gold Star Mothers, and pupils of 48 schools, who had been admitted free. Moreover, the performance was heard by other thousands who listened at their radio sets tuned to WEAF. This was the first broadcast of a complete opera in the United States.

For six consecutive years from 1923 to 1928, and again in 1930 and 1932, Mr. Frank produced remarkable open-air performances of opera at the New York Polo Grounds before audiences ranging from 10,000 to 25,000. Thousands of school children were his guests at each production.

Grand Opera for Masses.

In May, 1928, under auspices of a New York newspaper, two productions in Madison Square Garden to which the usual large percentage of auditors was admitted free. One of these performances was broadcast by Station WABC, with a short wave connection that carried it to all parts of the world. In 1932, Mr. Frank produced operas at the Chicago Stadium with such notable success that Herman Devries named him the Napoleon of grand opera.

The Washington Post is furthering Mr. Frank's undertaking to bring grand opera to the people of this city. A large allotment of tickets for each performance is available to Post readers at half the established prices. The demand for these tickets has been heavy, and those desiring good seat locations should not postpone their applications.

The artistic personnel of the International Opera Company follows:

Sopranos—Margaret Ringo, Emilia Vergeri, Maria Olla, Florence Misgen, Ruth Coleman and Lavinia Darve. Contraltos—Carmela Ponselle, Elizabeth Girard, Grace Angelaw, Rosita Fordieri and Berta Swan.

Tenors—Edward Ransome, Giuseppe Barsotti, Fortunato de Angelis, Ugo Martinelli, Carl Bruno and Constante Servino. Barytones—Giuseppe Martino-Rossi, Ciro de Ritis, Eugenio Prosperino and Lloyd Harris. Bassos—Amund Sjovik and William Terry.

Conductors — Gabriele Simeoni and Walter Grigaidis. Artistic director—Henry Odierro.

The operas to be presented are: November 19, "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci;" November 20, "Carmen;" November 21, "La Gioconda;" November 22, "Rigoletto;" November 23, "Aida;" November 24, "La Traviata;" November 25, "Aida" (matinee) and "Il Trovatore" (evening); November 26, "Faust."

A radio broadcast by eight of the principal artists will be given tonight from Station WMAL from 10 to 10:30 o'clock in conjunction with the Postilion hour. Those who will participate in the program are Carmela Ponselle, Giuseppe Martino-Rossi, Rosita Fordieri, Ciro de Ritis, Maria Olla, Carl Bruno, Elizabeth Girard and Lavinia Darve.

Metropolitan Title Borrowed By New English Opera Company

Outstanding Events of Musical Season in London, Paris and Berlin Summarized for Rapid Assimilation.

Whatever magical potency may reside in the word "metropolitan" when prefixed to "opera company" has been invoked in England by Robert Parker, who has formed under that title an organization devoted, for the present at least, to a repertory of Wagner in English. After a festival at Streathan and Golders Green, it fared forth touring and, at the last report, was on its hopeful way through the provinces with Florence Austral as one of its vocal assets. The singers were recruited, for the most part, from the lamented British National operatic group.

Another experiment which is being watched with curiosity is the new London Musicians Orchestra of 90 men, under the direction of Theodor Otscharkov. Modestly announcing no more than six Saturday afternoon concerts in the Scala Theater, they played their first program October 14. Whether they will receive sufficient encouragement to extend their season remains a matter of conjecture.

Regardles of upstarts, the London Philharmonic, the London Symphony, the Royal Philharmonic and the B. B. C. Symphony proceed merrily. Novelties promised for the season include Cyril Scott's "Disaster at Sea," a symphony by William Walton, a cello concerto by Arnold Bax, Respighi's "Belfegor" overture and Robert Heger's "Verdi Variations," which the composer will direct next month with the Royal Philharmonic. Another German conductor, Hans Weisbach, will be at the helm of the London Symphony in January to direct Graeser's orchestral arrangement of Bach's "The Art of Fugue."

In the matter of guest conductors, Manchester seems bent upon establishing a record. The Halle concerts there this season are to be directed by 13 successive wielders of the baton. In alphabetical order they are Bairstow, Barbirolli, Beecham, Boult, Coates, Elgar, Forbes, Heger, Howard, Krauss, Monteux, Stravinski and Wood. Variety would go but little further than this.

Although the Three Choirs Festival at Hereford lies weeks in the past, musicians are still talking about the excellencies of that 213th "meeting." Dr. Percy Hull, handicapped by illness, brought out admirable performances of "Elijah," the B minor mass, and Brahms' requiem. Sir Edward Elgar was there to conduct "The Dream of Gerontius" and "The Kingdom." No small interest was aroused by two works composed for the festival, Martin Shaw's "Sursum Corda" (a setting for tenor, orchestra and chorus of a poem by Laurence Binyon) and George Dyson's "Voyage of St. Paul to Melitta" (a dramatic setting of part of Chapter XXVII, Acts of the Apostles).

Musical Paris has been crowding into the Theatre des Champs Elysees to acclaim Arturo Toscanini, who conducted the augmented Straram Orchestra in two Wagnerian evening and a miscellaneous program. From the lyrical flights of the critics one infers that his readings of Wagner were a revelation to a public accustomed to less subtle interpreters.

At the Opera Comique, October 15, Tullio Serafin inaugurated six performances of Rossini in Italian—"Cinderella," "The Barber" and "The Italian in Algiers." Interest in these productions was second only to the revival of "L'Arlesienne," which was greeted in the press with eulogies of Bizet's little masterpiece.

Unless an overnight whim of unpredictable Adolf Hitler has changed the situation within the last few days, Wilhelm Furtwaengler holds dictatorial power over musical affairs in Germany. Not only is he the first Kapellmeister of the State Opera, but his appointment as Prussian councilor of state has extended his authority. He presides as chairman over the official program committee, which sees to it that public concerts are "in keeping with the new cultural spirit of the times."

The State opera opened its season with Pfitzner's "Palestrina" in a lackluster performance. Things were brighter at the production of "Carmen" with new scenery and Dusolina Giannini in the title role. Another American singer, Margaret Halstead, was the Venus in the first "Tannhaeuser" night. Richard Strauss' "Arabella" was introduced to Berlin on October 12, Furtwaengler conducting. The seventieth birthday of Richard II will be celebrated soon by performances of all his later operas.

Under the hesitant hand of the acting intendant, Dr. Paproth, the Berlin Municipal Opera began its season without a successor to the late Max von Schillings. The caution of the management keeps them from straying into any experimental productions. Only one novelty, and that a rather old one, is promised: Mozart's recently discovered ballet, "Die Rekrutierung."

Sad news has gone forth to those ambitious young conductors who may have planned to visit Berlin and return with press notices about their debuts. The Philharmonic Orchestra is, by a recent ruling, no longer available for rental purposes.

Child Artist Makes Debut At Symphony

Young Soloist Will Play Mendelssohn Concerto This Afternoon.

Gloria Perkins, an exceptionally talented child violinist, will make her debut as an orchestral soloist in Washington this afternoon, playing the Mendelssohn concerto with the National Symphony Orchestra, under direction of Dr. Hans Kindler. She is a pupil of Louis Persinger, who succeeded Leopold Auer as head of the violin department of the Juilliard Graduate School.

Gloria was born ten years ago in Winston-Salem, N. C., and has lived in New York since she was 2. At the age of 4 she played the piano with surprising ability and when she was 6 she began the study of violin with her mother. Her progress was so remarkable that she was placed under the tutelage of Mr. Persinger, who had instructed Yehudi Menuhin and Ruggiero Ricci.

Eastern High School will present its fall show on November 23 and 24. A feature of the entertainment will be a minstrel troupe of 20, assisted by an orchestra of 18 pieces directed by Jerome Schlossenberg. In addition to accompaniments, the orchestra will play "Manhattan Serenade" and Ravel's "Bolero." Paul D. Gable and C. U. Byrom are music instructors at the school.

An illustrated lecture, "Chopin at Majorca," was given last evening by Julia E. Schelling at the Washington College of Music. Musical illustrations were provided by four members of the faculty—Fanny Amstutz Roberts, Helen Miller, William Holden and Victor Neal.

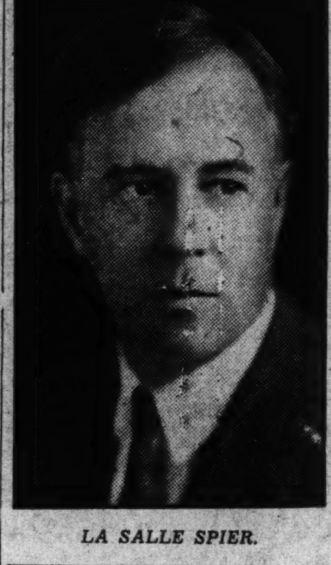
Who's Who in Local Music.



LA SALLE SPIER.

Although still unpublished, the compositions of La Salle Spier, composer and teacher, have been heard many times in many places. Sylvia Lent, violinist, has played them in her Washington and New York concerts; the Washington Composers Club, of which Mr. Spier is a member, has included them on their public programs.

While in New York, Mr. Spier was with Michio Itow and his troupe of Oriental dancers. Mr. Spier's activities included those of accompanist, composer for the special dances, and occasionally property man and stage hand.

Mr. Spier's talent for composition was manifest at the age of 13. At 16, when he was already an accomplished pianist, Mr. Spier gave his Washington debut, playing a group of his works, including a piano concerto.

After a period of piano study with Rafael Joseffy and harmony with Joseph Henius, Mr. Spier went to Berlin to study with Burmeister.

After his return to this country he lived for several years in New York, during which time he gathered inspirational material for his composing. "Impressions of the Bowery" is an example of this influence, a work originally scored for two pianos, which Mr. Spier is arranging for orchestra at the present time.

Among his compositions are two song cycles, "Pippa Passes," and a group of musical settings to poems of Poe, a violin sonata and several pieces for piano. He has composed many other things, but says that they are really "not good," and may be classed as exercises.

In regard to the modern trend of musical composition, Mr. Spier believes that a composer can be original without being extreme. Music should have a direct, not forced appeal, he believes.

Women of New Administration Assist in Welfare Work of Washington

Tradition of Past Preserved By Support to Organizations

Effort to Maintain Character-Building Work Parallel With Material Relief Receives Sanction in Group Discussions.

The traditional part played by women of each changing political administration in the activities and projects of the women of Washington is following past precedent this fall by the women of the new administration. At every discussion of projects in which the women of Washington are interested, a woman of Washington's official group will always be found either as an active participant or just to give the weight of her presence to the issues being considered.

The determined efforts of women of the Capital to preserve the character building agencies which might be eliminated in the greater need for the support of agencies which have to do with food, shelter and clothing has had most effective support of the women of the official circles.

Satisfaction is being expressed at each meeting of club or organization that the women of the official circles have made it possible for sponsors of welfare movements to be heard by high authorities.

Help From First Ladies.

Names of First Ladies on patroness' charity and institution lists long have been an established order in Washington and more or less of a routine matter. Mrs. Coolidge, who clung tenaciously to the idea that a President's wife should not make speeches, never failed to be among those present at cornerstone layings, house warmings, dedications and similar assemblies.

Mrs. Hoover made it a practice never to allow her name to be used even as a patroness in a project in which she did not take a real interest. When her name was used it meant that she would be among those present and working.

Probably no other First Lady spent as many hours in visiting Washington institutions as Mrs. Hoover did. She knew the heads of hospitals and orphan asylums and playground directors.

In the days of the World War Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was a member of the great body of official women in Washington working in behalf of local institutions.

Mrs. Magna Issues Call.

Mrs. Russell William Magna, president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, has sent out a rallying call to national service to the women of the society in her fall message. Mrs. Magna says: "To derive the greatest benefits, all the people must pull together, and must adopt a willingness to serve. No plan of reconstruction can meet with success unless every one stands squarely for it. The strength of the Nation depends upon the spirit of its people.

"Avoid skepticism, obliterate fear, discard adverse criticisms, speak in terms of hope, assume attitudes of cheer, radiate smiles, promote courage, dedicate yourselves to an earnest sense of purpose. Remember yesterday is past. To try to relive it is futile. The day and the play can not be changed.

"But American character, rising to any emergency, takes the new hand, stays in the game and plays to win. Uncle Sam can put his house in order if the woman power of the country will face the task squarely, will cut the pattern of their daily housekeeping to the reconstruction pattern. Women stood the depression storm with the fortitude that has ever been a feminine characteristic.

"Out of their storehouse of necessity women will bring their courage, their ingenuity, high hopes and resourcefulness. Their fearless, frank support is essential. Let us again be content with common-sense language, common-sense attitude, sane reasoning, plain logic and, if you will, the homely virtues of renewed faith in God, the preservation of homes and the promotion of the common good. The people make the country. A people with positive character, affirmative thoughts, adhering to duty with divine faith, will inevitably stabilize the Nation. In the march of events our members will fall in line."

D. A. R. in Every State to Honor President General Wednesday

160,000 Members to Give Birthday Parties, Aiding Constitution Hall.

In every State of the Union, each of the 2,479 chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution will hold a birthday party in honor of their president general, Mrs. Russell William Magna, of Holyoke, Mass., next Wednesday.

A birthday cake bearing 100 candles will be lighted at each party, and the 160,000 members will bring their contributions and pledges for liquidation of the amount still due on Constitution Hall, which has been set for the Continental Congress in April, 1934. The program for entertainment will vary in each chapter, but at every meeting there will be sung a group of songs composed by Mrs. Magna.

Constitution Hall, the last of the trilogy of monumental buildings, erected by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, houses the Continental Congress. The annual meeting of the society is always held in Washington during the week in which the 19th of April falls. It is one of the most stately buildings in a neighborhood which boasts of the Corcoran Art Gallery, the Red Cross group and the Pan-American Building.

From the beginning of the project, Mrs. Magna, now president general, has been chairman of the Constitution Hall finance committee, and in such capacity she has visited every State and every city in which a State conference has been held, during the terms of office of the last two of her immediate predecessors. Dubbed the "official gold-digger" of the society, she collected more than $1,000,000 for the building without the cost of a single cent to the society. Her associates say that so widely known was she and so unselfish were her labors in the interest of the society's effort to provide an auditorium commensurate with its necessity, that in 1932 she was elected without oppostiion to fill the highest office in the gift of its membership.

As a tribute to Mrs. Magna's leadership, November 15, her natal day, has been selected as the date on which members of the society are to range themselves in chapter formation for the final effort to liquidate the remaining indebtedness on Constitution Hall, and place the final capstone on the efforts of the president general. Kallipolis Grotto, Masonic Fun-Makers, Finishes Plans for Mardi Gras Dance Nov. 20

Benefit Frolic at Temple Lasts From 8 to Midnight

Fast-Growing Organization Emphasizes Charity for Underprivileged; Boasts Serious, Elaborate Ritual.

Jingling bells, showers of confetti, dancing and merrymaking will be the order on November 20 at the Shrine Temple, when Kallipolis Grotto, Mystic Order of Veiled Prophets, will hold its annual Mardi Gras and dance.

The frolic will last from 8 o'clock until midnight.

The committee in charge, all past masters in entertainment, consists of Monarch Frederick Wilken, William J. Erskine, chief justice; Richard T. Umhau, master of ceremonies; E. W. Libbey, P. G. M., secretary; L. W. Estes, P. M.; Edward S. Schmid, P. G. M.; Charles A. Stevens, P. M.; Samuel F. Shreve, P. M.; Charles D. Shackelford, P. M., Castleman P. Boss, P. M.; Arthur M. Poynton, P. M.; O. A. C. Oehmler, P. M.; Arthur C. Shaw, C. F Armiger, Solomon Stichman, C. W. Umhau, Richard L. Trice, Nathan Weill, Reuben Ford, William T. Wade and William L. Gardiner.

The Mardi Gras is being held so that the Kallipolis Grotto may continue its welfare and charitable activities.

Kallipolis Grotto has been an institution in Washington more than 30 years, its first Monarch being the late Edwin B. Hay. Its living past monarchs are Edward S. Schmid, John H. Shreve, Raymond B. Dickey, Edward V. Libbey, George H. Emmons, jr., Allen H. Rogers, Charles D. Shackelford, Charles A. Stevens, Castleman P. Boss, Marshall W. Pickering, Henry J. Gompers, Samuel F. Shreve, L. Whiting Estes, Stephen H. Talkes, Arthur M. Poynton, Henry C. Stein, C. F. Mowell and Oscar A. C. Oehmler.

Two Members Go High.

Two of its past monarchs, Edward S. Schmid and Edward W. Libbey, have been honored with the highest office within the gift of the Veiled Prophets of the United States and Canada, that of grand monarch. The order was organized in 1899 at Hamilton, N. Y., as a local organization, by member of, and as an adjunct to, Hamilton Lodge, No. 120, F. & A. M.

But the founders builded better than they knew. It spread rapidly and soon became a national organization, later spreading to Canada, where there now are Grottoes in Edmonton, Hamilton, London, Toronto and Windsor. The grottoes are governed by a supreme council, which meets in annual convention, the convention city being selected each year by the delegates and members composing the supreme council. This year's convention was held in Chicago, and next year will be in Atlantic City.

The ritual is original and unique. Its proper rendition requires a large stage, elaborate costumes and stage settings. While pervaded throughout with a spirit of fun, the order teaches a serious lesson. There are at present 171 grottoes, with a combined membership of approximately 150,000.

Primarily an organization for fun and frolic, it also has a serious side. All Grottoes endeavor to engage in some form of humanitarian work, sponsored by the supreme council through its committee on humanitarian work, of which Post Grand Monarch E. W. Libbey, of Kallipolis Grotto, is the chairman.

$85,597 to Charity.

This work justifies the Grotto slogan, "Goodfellowship." The program contemplates participation by the Grottoes in Masonic and other charities. The reports of the committee show that during the past three years the Grottoes have contributed $85,597.28 to charitable undertakings.

In addition to contributions of money, the spirit of charity is exemplified by many projects sponsored by the Grottoes. Among these are the furnishing of entertainment to inmates of various charitable institutions, employment bureau work, maintainning summer camps for undernourished and sick children, donations of baskets of food to the needy, contributions to milk funds, collection and distribution of canned fruits and vegetables to the poor, assistance in maintaining a trade school, fresh air camps, caring for teeth at an orphan asylum, serving of lunches to school children, furnishing of shoes and clothing to children in need, toys to children in hospitals, Christmas baskets to unemployed, assistance to children at a tuberculosis hospital, annual dinner parties to orphan asylums.

There is now in formation a Grotto Glee and Dramatic Club under the direction of Prophet Solomon Stichman. This new auxiliary will make its bow to fraternal Washington at an early date.

V. F. W. National Membership Drive Joined by D. C. Posts

Seeks to Carry Principles of Organization Before All Former Soldiers, and Enlist Aid for Legislative Program.

The opening shot at 11 o'clock yesterday morning in the veterans' defense rally, sponsored by the District of Columbia Department, Veterans of Foreign Wars, representing 15 posts, was echoed by more than 3,000 other attacks against the economy act, launched simultaneously by posts throughout the Nation.

The most intensive membership campaign in the history of the Veterans of Foreign Wars is planned, and every local former service man is eligible to membership.

The V. F. W. is organized, according to Commander in Chief Van Zandt, not only for its members, but for the welfare of all veterans, and its cardinal principles include the adequate care of all disabled veterans, the welfare of the widows and orphans of deceased veterans, and immediate payment of adjusted service certificates.

"The V. F. W. realizes it is only by force of numbers that we, as veterans, can make ourselves heard in the halls of Congress," he said.

"The success of the V. F. W. legislative program will be achieved the more quickly as eligible veterans recognize and assume their individual responsibility of 'fighting in the ranks' for the good of all veterans by enlisting themselves with those who are now fighting for deserved benefits.

"As one of the major veteran organizations recognized by Congress and the Government of the United States, the records of our society reveal a policy that has at all times been courageous, just, aggressive and independent," he declared.

V. F. W. Armistice Ball.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars military ball, held at the Wardman Park Hotel last night, was a success.

Mme. Hernholm was the entertainment star of the evening, receiving continuous applause after each number. Mme. Hernholm is the daughter of a French commandant. The entertainers from the Club Michel also proved popular.

10 Sixth Marine Brigade Men Will Take Tests for Annapolis

Unit Wins Reputation as Training School for Sea Fighters.

Ten enlisted men of the Sixth Marine Brigade, the District's Marine Corps fleet reserve organization, will take the 1934 entrance examinations for admittance to the U. S. Naval Academy, Lieut. Col. J. J. Staley, commanding the brigade, announced last night.

The men are Joseph H. Tucker, 515 Eighth street southwest; Robert G. E. Butler, 605 Lafayette avenue, Roanoke, Va.; John B. Ferriter, 1410 Whittier place northwest; Raymond Alexander, 1609 East Capitol street; William L. Kieffer, 17 Sixteenth street southeast; Wilson H. Cranford, 73 Rhode Island avenue northwest; John W. Chambers, 2822 Twenty-ninth street; Lidstone C. Russell, 2400 Twentieth street northwest; William L. Morrison, 5606 Kansas avenue northwest, and Carlton S. Williams, 712 Eighth street northeast.

Although the brigade is but four years old it has already established an enviable reputation for qualifying enlisted men for the Naval Academy and the Coast Guard Academy at New London, Conn. Last year five men from the brigade went to Annapolis and two to New London.

Already serving in commissioned ranks are two former enlisted men of the Sixth Brigade. One is Ensign Warren W. Whitside, of the Supply Corps of the Navy, now on the U. S. S. Whitney. He was formerly a sergeant in the brigade. The other, Ensign John H. Forney, is serving on the Coast Guard cutter Mendota. At the Coast Guard Academy in New London, Forney was a three-letter athlete, starring in football, basket ball and baseball.

In addition to sending enlisted men up for the entrance examinations to the Naval Academy each year, the brigade follows a policy of commissioning its own junior reserve officers from the ranks. Classes for coaching these candidates are held at the brigade armory each week.

D. A. V. Plans Vigorous Drive To Restore Slashed Pensions

National Commander Asks President to Reset $100 Monthly Pay.

Reestablishment of $100 a month as the basic payment for service-connected pensions is the immediate objective of the Disabled American Veterans, developments here the past week revealed.

Expressing the opinion that the coming session of Congress would probably have a complete review of the question of veterans' relief through committee hearings, Joe W. McQueen, of Kansas City, National commander of the D. A. V., presented to the President a proposal that there be immediately restored the $100 basis which was reduced by 10 per cent at the last session of Congress.

The letter of Commander McQueen to the President follows:

"In view of the steady increase in living costs, together with persistent reports that there is being considered a reduction in the amount of cuts in the salaries of Government employes, it is respectfully and earnestly requested that there be restored to the service-connected disabled World War men the 10 per cent reduction.

"It is a matter of official record that literally thousands of these men are today unemployed, with resultant suffering to themselves, their wives and children. Still, with the prices of necessities increasing, the small incomes of these men are stationary.

"It is desired again to emphasize the fact that the D. A. V. at this time is concentrating activities entirely on behalf of those whose disabilities resulted from the war."

In response to inquiries at the press conference during the past week, President Roosevelt said that while the question of whether the White House approved of this suggestion was premature, intensive study was being made of the subject and it was expected a definite decision would be made shortly.

The National Legislative Program of the D. A. V. calls for the restoration of all benefits to service-connected cases destroyed by the act of March 30 and subsequent regulations, without any mention being made of pensions for non-service-connected cases or the cash bonus. At the D. A. V. Washington office during the week the hope was expressed that prior to the reconvening of Congress, or through suggestions in his annual message in January, President Roosevelt will favor the elimination of the prescat 10 per cent reduction. Regardless, the organization will press during the session for complete reconsideration of all service-connected benefits.

Following the custom over the years, a delegation from the D. A. V. yesterday placed an Armistice Day wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington.

During the coming week officials of the D. C. Department of the D. A. V. will decide definitely upon the program for the annual banquet of the D. C. Department, set for the middle of January. In the past there have been a number of speakers, but this year it is planned to limit the speakers to three, with National Commander McQueen coming here from Kansas City to make the principal address.

During the past week national officers of the D. A. V. in Washington have received instructions from national headquarters to attend a meeting in Cincinnati early in December, to consider internal affairs and decide policy matters.

C. C. C. Camps for Virginia.

The final tabulation showing the number of C. C. C. camps to be located in each of the 46 States and the District of Columbia discloses 471 camps have been allotted to 14 Southern States. This represents an increase of 121 camps over the number of C. C. C. camps in these Southern States.

All told, there will be 97,035 men working in Southern forests and parks during the winter. This compares with approximately 72,000 men who occupied 350 Southern camps during the first enrollment period. The President's emergency conservation work program calls for maintenance of approximately 316,000 men, including 14,400 Indians, in forest work camps during the winter.

The War Department announced the transfer of C. C. C. companies from the far West to Eastern and Southern States has been completed. Virginia has been assigned 24 additional camps, bringing the total camps in the State to 45; 14,223 men will occupy these camps. Maryland will have 12 camps, with 2,473 men enrolled.

Means Holds Disabled Veterans' Care Chiefly Government Duty

Legion Chief Takes Issue With President on Responsibility.

Department Commander Rice W. Means addressed a meeting of the Costello Post last Tuesday night in which he took issue with President Roosevelt that the care of the disabled and distressed veteran, his widow and orphan, is primarily a local responsibility. Mr. Means declared that the first demand of the legion should be that the Federal Government assume its obligation arising out of service of veterans and pledged his support to National Commander Edward A. Hayes, who has also taken issue in this same matter with the President.

Declaring that the obtaining of such Federal care and the securing and preservation of veterans' civil service preference rights constituted the two principal objectives of this department, he outlined plans for the accomplishment.

Ollie M. Schriver was presented with a medal from National headquarters in recognition of his work as coach of the American team which won first place recently in the FIDAC rifle match competition. Teams of seven allied countries participated. The American team scored 1,960 points out of a possible 2,000. Mr. Schriver's work has won him National recognition. He has coached several National and international championship teams.

Plans for a membership drive include division of the post into seven battalions of 100 men each, and each battalion into four companies.

Appointments announced at the meeting were: Robert Coleman, vice chairman of membership committee; George Frey, general chairman of Americanism; Jack Whitley, post athletic officer, and Robert Coleman, color guard.

The post was invited to participate in a meeting at 8:15 p. m. next Tuesday in memory of the late Justice Walter I. McCoy, at the First Congressional Church, Tenth and G streets.

Jacob Jones Post.

The November meeting of the U. S. S. Jacob Jones Post, No. 2, American Legion, will be held at the Thomas Circle Club, 1326 Massachusetts avenue northwest, tomorrow night at 8 o'clock. An Armistice Day program, with a talk by Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, U. S. A., retired, department Americanism officer of the American Legion, will be given.

A group of members met at the Red Cross Chapter House, 1730 E street northwest, Tuesday evening and shellacked several hundred pages of braille for the blind. The Americanism officer, Mrs. Alberta Lacey, held a meeting of her committee to outline plans for the year's activities.

The advisory council of the post met at the George Washington Post Clubhouse, 1441 Rhode Island avenue northwest, Thursday evening. Thanksgiving welfare was discussed.

A uniformed delegation representing the post in Armistice Day observance at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier and the tomb of Woodrow Wilson, National Cathedral.

Sergt. Jasper Unit.

Sergt. Jasper Unit 13, Ladies Auxiliary, the American Legion, met at the Thomas Circle Club November 2. Mrs. Ruth Orlosky, president, presided. Plans for the coming year were discussed.

The unit colors were present Navy Day at the John Paul Jones Memorial, and on Armistice Day at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and the Washington Cathedral. Mrs. Ola D. Lee and Mrs. Alma Goodacre were color bearers at the Navy Day exercises.

George Washington Post, No. 1.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, newly elected commander of George Washington Post, No. 1, the American Legion, announced at the meeting of the post Tuesday night the reappointment of Past Commanders J. J. Murphy as adjutant and Lew S. Mohler as finance officer. Both have served several years in their respective positions.

Commander Longfellow, who was unable to be present when the other officers of the post were installed last month by Department Commander Rice W. Means, was installed by Past Commander Howard S. Fisk. The meeting was opened by First Vice Commander Howard E. Snyder.

Commander Longfellow was elected as the representative of the post on the department executive committee. Past Commander Murphy is alternate. The commander will announce his committee appointments at the December meeting.

Announcement was made of the sudden death last week of Past Commander Charles Owen Shaw, one of the post's most active members, who was also a member of the board of governors of the post clubhouse. The post was represented at the funeral by Commander Longfellow and Past Commander Fisk, who served as pallbearers. The recent death of Carleton Van Valkenberg was also announced. Both were buried with military honors in Arlington National Cemetery.

Past Department Commander Amos A. Fries was elected a member of the post by transfer from National Press Club Post, No. 20. He served in the Chemical Warfare Service and retired as a major general, after serving for several years as chief of that bureau in the War Department.

Another veteran elected to membership was Stephen T. Early, Secretary to President Roosevelt. He was commissioned a second lieutenant of Cavalry April, 1917, at Fort Myer, Va. Later he served with the Eightieth Division, 317 Machine Gun Battalion and with Military Intelligence Section of the General Staff at Chaumont, France. He was also assistant officer in charge of the Stars and Stripes, overseas newspaper.

Guests were Philip C. Richards, a member of Paris Post, No. 1, Paris, France; J. Orken, secretary of the United States Maimed Soldiers League, and William J. Wheatley, a lieutenant in the United States Naval Reserve Force during the World War.

Post Historian Howard S. Fisk told the members of an article in the Badger Legionnaire, the official organ of the Department of Wisconsin, stating that George Washington Post, No. 2, of that department claimed to be the first and oldest post in the American Legion and of his reply. The Wisconsin post was organized April 27, 1919, whereas George Washington Post of this department was organized March 7, 1919, and received charter No. 1 from the National organizaion. The Western post was chartered June 20, 1919.

New Plant, Opening This Week, Keyed to Serve Washington With 360,000 Horsepower

Buzzard Point Development Begins Operation This Week

Smith, Former Head of Federal Power Commission, Declares Steam and Water Form Perfect Team for Performing Work of Nation.

This week a new electric power plant serving Washington with an ultimate capacity of 360,000 horsepower will be placed in operation by the Potomac Electric Power Co. Dr. George Otis Smith, former chairman of the Federal Power Commission, has written an exclusive article for Post readers describing the importance of the new plant to Washingtonians and commenting on the place of power in everyday life.

By George Otis Smith.

Hitch up America's coal and America's water power and the result is teamwork that is well worth while. Steam and water work better in double harness than separately. This rule holds pretty much the country over, and Washington is fortunate in having its supply of energy come from this double electric team—steam and water. Now, with the new steam station at Buzzard Point to be put "on the line" this week, it is opportune to learn how this big team of 400,000 horsepower works together in pulling Washington's electric load.

There are three fundamental requirements that must be met by a modern electric system serving a large city: reasonable rates, adequate supply and unfailing service. And of these three virtues the greatest is the third—service that never fails. In this descriptive account of the electric system that supplies the District of Columbia and adjoining communities, the triple test will be applied.

Rates for household current here in Washington compare favorably with those elsewhere in the country.

Full Efficiency High.

Credit for low rates needs be given partly to good engineering, for one controlling reason for the base-rate of 3.9 cents here in Washington is that generating costs are kept low. Since the construction of the Benning power station in 1906 the record for fuel efficiency has been high compared with the average for the United States.

However, to keep in the van of engineering progress, as well as to meet an ever-increasing demand for more current, it became necessary to build a new steam station, larger and better than the old. In the public utility business, engineering innovations are the rule: The public interest requires constantly improved service. Thus, the new station at Buzzard Point has been planned, like its predecessors, on Fourteenth street and at Benning, to be the latest model of power stations.

The Buzzard Point site, between Half and First streets on V street southwest, was selected because of its ample supply of condensing water, its transportation connections by both rail and water for fuel supply, and its nearness to those parts of the city where the demand for current is heaviest.

The National Capital Park and Planning Commission, in approving of this selection of a powerhouse site, has taken every precaution to make this a first step in the improvement of the water front between the Navy Yard and the Army War College.

Architecture Pleasing.

Architecturally, the new structure, by its simple lines and pleasing proportions, would ornament any part of the city. Even the stack of light brick which indicates the purpose of the building adds to its attractiveness, quite in contrast with the tall and unsightly iron stacks that dominated the main generating station of 30 years ago at Fourteenth and B streets northwest, where now the Labor Department building is approaching completion.

The new station faces south and is designed to be added to on the north so as to house ultimately boiler and generator units, six in number, sufficient for an output of 270,000 kilowatts, or about 360,000 horsepower.

Just what this capacity means can be better understood when a comparison is made with the two water power plants at Niagara Falls on the American side, which have only about 50 per cent more than this capacity. Or, to take another notable water power, the Buzzard Point station will eventually turn out more primary power—that is, power that can be counted on for use all the time—than will be available at Muscle Shoals even after the Cove Creek and No. 3, or Joe Wheeler dams are constructed.

Gigantic Boilers.

At present the new station provides space for two complete units, one of which is now installed, but this alone has nearly three times the capacity of the whole Washington system of 30 years ago. What impresses the visitor to this modern plant is the bigness of everything: Each boiler is 85 feet high and will deliver 375,000 pounds of steam an hour at a temperature of 825 degrees Fahrenheit, and 650 pounds pressure.

Simplicity and safety have been guiding principles with the engineers who supervised the erection of this plant. Precautions have been taken against the hazards of lubricating-oil fires, incident to the high temperatures of steam operating the turbine generators.

Last year the necessary steps were taken for bringing into the District electric current from the Susquehanna River in Lancaster County, Pa. This water-power interconnection, which was completed March 3 last, has several advantages. First, is that it gives to the local company the capacity needed to meet the peak load, which happens to be timed differently here than in Baltimore and Philadelphia, cities whose industries are also served by the hydro-plant at Safe Harbor on the Susquehanna. This difference in character of load made possible a favorable purchase and exchange contract for the hydro-power up to 60,000 kilowatts.

However, this interconnection with a water power 75 miles distant involved a large expenditure. The Safe Harbor company had to construct a 22-mile extension of its transmission line from Ellicott City to the District line and the Potomac company had to build its Takoma Park substation, where the 230,000-volt current is received and stepped down to 13,800 volts for local distribution.

The movement of hydro-power to the Nation's Capital possesses special interest from the fact that the Safe Harbor development is under license by the Federal Power Commission, the dam being across a navigable river. This project was licensed to the Safe Harbor Water Power Corporation in 1930 and already represents an expenditure of $25,000,000.

The generating units already installed are five in number with a total capacity of 212,500 horsepower. Eventually the total installation will be 12, with a capacity of more than half a million horsepower. One major use of the power from this large hydro plant is to run the electric locomotives on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Power Demand Grows.

Thirty years ago, five years after the power house on Fourteenth street was erected, with the idea this would be ample for many years to provide for all needs of Washington, the peak load here was 10,000 kilowatts. The present year, the corresponding peak load is estimated at 150,000 kilowatts, and within five years is expected to cross the 200,000-kilowatt mark.

Along with this 15-fold increase in demand there have been two significant changes: 30 years ago it required more than twice as much coal as now to make the steam to generate a kilowatt-hour of electricity, and the price to the Washington householder for that kilowatt-hour in 1903 was more than twice what it is in 1933.

The end of improvement has not been reached. Although fuel is but a small item in the cost of electricity delivered in the home, there is some comfort in the fact that at the Buzzard Point station the progress in fuel efficiency will be carried further, bringing the coal consumption down below .85 of a pound per kilowatt hour. This economy in fuel is all the more necessary just now with rising prices of coal.

An essential character of electric service in the modern city is that it must never fail. The users of the current require some practical insurance against operating hazards, for with public utility officials, excuses for poor service are not in order. With two local steam plants, whether both are in operation or one remains in reserve, that guaranty against interruption of the electric current now seems to be furnished.

Underground Wires.

The underground system of wiring also contributes in large degree to safeguarding the distribution against breaks. Mention of this far-flung, but little known, network of wires under the streets suggests how much this absence of unsightly poles and overhead wires contributes to the vision of Washington as "the world's most beautiful city."

Two incidents in the history of the Benning plant will explain the relative ease of mind enjoyed by officials now that the Buzzard Point station is ready to serve. On one occasion there was too little water in the Anacostia River at Benning and more recently the operating trouble was due to too much water.

On March 2, 1914, the Benning station was out of commission for 24 hours by reason of unusually low water in the Potomac and a northeast gale combining to drive the water away from the condensing tubes, which are absolutely essential parts of the modern steam plant, and so that night it was literally true that the wind blew out Washington's electric lights.

Last August 23 the explanation of operating trouble was quite different; high water drowned out the plant. Together, these unforeseen results of natural causes, which the lawyers call "acts of God," demonstrated that more than one source of power is essential to safeguard the city's supply and also illustrated the decided advantage of electric interconnection.

Cities Aid Each Other.

No city lives unto itself. On February 27, 1904, Baltimore sent out a call for aid in time of dire need, and the Washington Fire Department sent apparatus and men over to help fight a great fire.

Recently, when the floods came down the Anacostia River and Washington faced failure of light and power, few citizens knew how help came over the wires from from other cities. That night and the next day Baltimore and all adjacent communities economized that Washington might share their power supply, and thus the Safe Harbor connection between Washington and her neighbors to the northeast proved its worth.

Continuous electric service has become an indispensable condition in the modern city. Your daily routine is electric-controlled from the moment you turn on the percolator or toaster at the breakfast table until late at night when you turn off the reading lamp at the bedside.

Here in Washington that service, which is also available all through the night, is made possible only as there is an unfailing flow of electricity over the 5,063 miles of transmission and distribution cables and 8,112 miles of overhead transmission and distribution wires. It is an invisible helper coming to your homes by unseen ways that so faithfully serves in an ever-lengthening list of houschold tasks.

Power Provides Work.

There is also a larger aspect of this putting at work the power-generating machinery now made available at Buzzard Point. This broader view comprehends the necessity of city planning by utility operators. Adequate service means nothing less than keeping ahead of the demand for modern improvements. Power must be at hand to serve any industrial zones which may be laid out by the city officials for future development.

The presence of some industries is needed even in the Nation's Capital, in order to furnish employment for the young men and women—Washington born and raised—whom apportionment quotas effectively bar from civil service jobs.

The Buzzard Point power plant stands as a good example of civic foresight, because it meets the test of furnishing adequate and unfailing service for several years ahead.

Preparing Car for Winter's Ravages Is Profitable Investment for Careful Motorist

Overhauling Will End Cold Bouts With Stalled Engines

Accident Prevention Repays Driver for Time and Money Spent on Making Automobile Serviceable for Bleak Season.

Motorists could profit themselves greatly, if they would, by applying to the question of preparing the car for winter the words of an acknowledged leader of the automotive engineering profession: "It is not a question of whether one can afford it, but rather whether one can afford not to do it."

One skidding stop against a lamp post or another car, for instance, usually is far more expensive than a set of new tires for the rear wheels. New hose connections at a few cents an inch are a lot cheaper than replenishing the antifreeze supply which may be lost as a result of defective connections. The time lost and the taxi fares paid as a result of owners' inability to start their car engines in cold weather undoubtedly would reach some staggering total if there were any way of computing it.

This year, particularly, the average car in use is older and more time-worn than was the case a few years ago.

The largest single item of cost faced by the motorist is the possible accident. This draws attention especially to brakes, tires, steering mechanism, headlights and windshield wiper.

Safety in Matched Treads.

The brakes should be adjusted for equalization and for quicker stopping, the latter because reduced visibility is inevitable in winter. If the brake linings are too thin to permit of the fast, close and even adjustment demanded, relining is the economically wise course. Lining costs and labor charges now are both down to new lows.

Equalized brakes alone, of course, are not a positive assurance against a skidless winter. Tires with reasonably matched treads are greater safety. If the motorist does not want to trade in his old tires, he can store them in a dark, dry place and bring them out again for use during seasons that do not place such a high premium upon tread condition.

Keeping the car under control at all times when the street surface is least favorable to it requires attention to the steering mechanism. Wheel alignment, back lash and end play should be checked.

Weathered headlight reflectors—and many an old car has them—can not provide light of the proper intensity. If jewelers rouge, moistened in alcohol, will not clean the reflectors, replacement or replating is worth considering. Another precautionary step is the replacement of bulbs that no longer are providing a maximum rated volume of light.

Antifreeze Solution.

The three most popular antifreeze solutions are alcohol, glycerin or glycerin compounds, and ethylene-glycol, a solution marketed under a trade name. All are excellent protections for the automobile cooling system if used in the right quantity. Different characteristics, however, recommend them to different car owners.

In first cost, alcohol is the least expensive. Because it has a boiling point of 180 degrees, however, it is more subject to loss through evaporation. That necessitates periodic check on the adequacy of the solution and more frequent replenishment of the supply. These disadvantages, however, do not keep millions of motorists from using alcohol as an antifreeze.

The other two most popular solutions have boiling points higher than wate. Although costing more originally, one filling of them usually lasts through the winter unless the solution is lost through leakage. To prevent this it is recommended that hose connections in the cooling system be replaced if even slightly worn and precautions taken to keep the level of the solution from 2 to 3 inches below the radiator overflow pipe. The latter allows for the expansion of the solution when hot.

The windshield wiper is important in winter. A new blade is one of the greatest of safety investments if the old one is hard and brittle. Lubrication will help the wiper mechanism in working against a collection of snow and sleet. That is one of the helpful things that motorists seldom remember.

Hard Starting Needless.

Beyond safety, the large economy of an adequate winter preparation program lies in the reduction of operating costs and the prevention of emergency situations. It is easier, more convenient and cheaper to take the car to the shop once for attention than to call a mechanic several times.

There is less excuse for hard starting of the engine in cold weather than the average motorist realizes. Cars are designed to perform under just such weather conditions. Given a battery of full strength, an electrical system that is clean and properly adjusted from switch to spark plugs and a carburetor adjustment that is suitably rich together with a choke that is fully operative, and there is no reason why any engine should not start readily in cold weather. Particularly is this true if the engine is not filled with an oil of too high a viscosity and the gasoline tank with a fuel of too low a volatility.

Easy cold starting, motorists should remember, is a measure of the operating efficiency and economy of an engine. When an engine is hard to start, the car owner may be sure that it is not delivering full performance at any time; that it is wasteful of fuel and otherwise costly to operate. If the price of having it tuned up is not compensated for in the fuel saving, it unquestionably is in the convenience of efficiency and the time saved by it. This is true, engineers maintaitn, even though the job involves replacement of old and defective spark plugs.

Another point that should be borne in mind in connection with easy starting is that increasing the generator charging rate will not bring back an undercharged battery. Nor will a battery in such a condition spin a cold engine at a fast enough rate to make it start quickly. The least expensive way is to have the battery fully charged before the cold season gets definitely under way.

Economical Spending.

The seasonal preparation program now in order brings the car out on the other side of winter in a far better mechanical condition. An illustration is to be found in the case of having the transmsision and differential filled with lighter lubricants; those cold-tested for the particular temperatures about to be encountered.

An attempt to drive on heavier lubricants will result in what the engineer calls "channeling" on the part of the gears in these two units of the automobile. It means that gears will cut their way through the congealed grease or fluid oil and operate through these channels without receiving lubricant. Excessive wear is bound to be the result.

Anohter contribution to undue wear on the car is that which grows out of operation at too low a temperature for engine safety. In order to prevent this circumstance some sort of protection for the bottom half of the raidator should be provided, the best solution being a winter front of some kind. Even a piece of cardboard is better than nothing at all, for it will deflect the icy blasts which blow upon the front of the engine.

Considered from the angles of safety, convenience and efficiency, the winter preparation program thus outlined is less expensive to have done than to avoid.

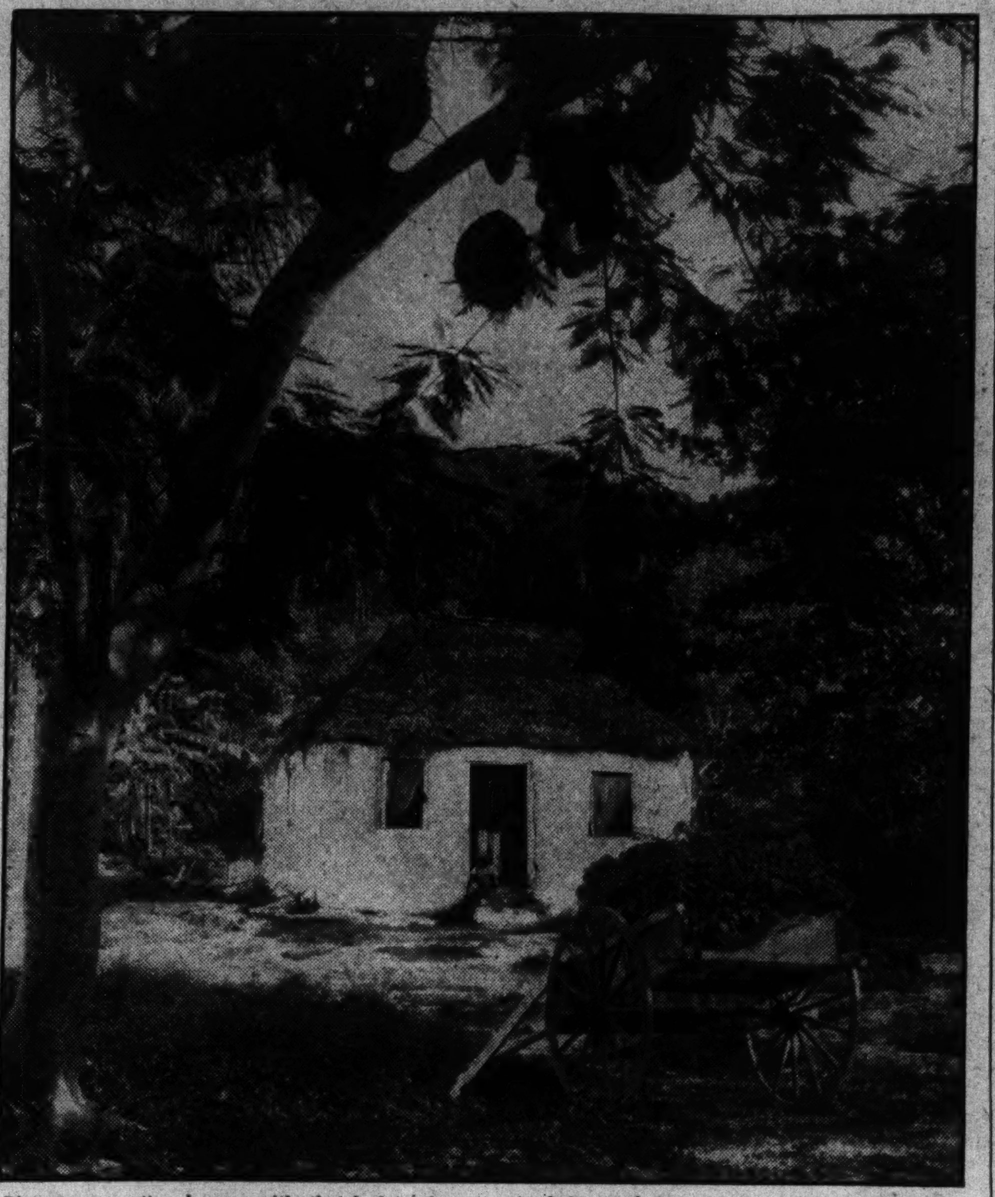
Where Nature Smiles All Year Round



Picturesque native houses with thatched roofs, two-wheeled carts laden with the fruits of the garden, in the shade of tropical foliage are sights that reward the traveler who visits the interior of the Bahama Islands.

Holiday Luxury and Pirate Legends Blended at Nassau

Customs From the Reign of Charles I Jostle With 1933 Modes.

Nassau, on the Island of New Providence, is the essence of all the Treasure Islands. Here is the repository of the story of Bahamian piracy, freebooting, contraband-running and—strangest of parallels—the epitome of the development of the peculiar form of government known as representative but not responsible. Woodes Rogers accepted the surrender of two hundred pirates and hanged those who refused to quit their nefarious trade in the grounds of Old Fort Nassau, on the site of which now stands the new Colonial Hotel.

On the hill behind the city is Fort Fincastle, a paddle steamer type of strong point, behind the peculiar construction of which lies the story of the disagreement between the Royal Engineers and the Royal Governor. Towering above the fort is the Water Tower, and from its summit may be seen the panorama of the New Providence coast line and islands that reach away to the horizon.

Fort Charlotte, to the westward, can give the "creeps" to the sensitive. Away you go down seemingly never-ending steps into subterranean chambers, with a great well to peer into and queer passages cut out of solid rock to get lost in.

Holiday of Free Fancy.

All these things, with streets of walled gardens and charming vistas of color, give Nassau its charm, its restfulness and its delightful atmosphere. A holiday in Nassau can be a perpetual round of pleasure and delight. Golf, tennis, riding, yachting, swimming, exploring—or just doing nothing at all!

The Bahamas is one of the three smaller colonies of the empire enjoying representative, although not responsible, government. The executive government is conducted, under letters patent, by a governor, appointed by the crown, aided by an executive council of eight, the unofficial members of which have a seat in one of the branches of the Legislature and are appointed for periods of five years. The official members are the colonial secretary, the attorney general and the receiver general. The legislative authority resides in the governor, a legislative council of nine members, appointed by the crown, and a representative assembly, known as the House of Assembly, of 29 members. The Bahamas House of Assembly has now been in existence over 200 years and has had an interesting and at times exciting history. The seat of government is in Nassau in the Island of New Providence.

The climate of the Bahamas, especially between November and May, is one of the finest in the world and is generally regarded as one of the colony's greatest assets, attracting as it does thousands of tourists annually to its shroes. When the temperature is at 45 in Palm Beach in February it will be 60 in Grand Bahama and at noon a comfortable 70 degrees in the shade. During the winter months, when there is very little rain and cool easterly and northerly breezes prevail, the temperature averages about 70 degrees Fahrenheit; from June to October the temperature runs between 75 degrees and 90 degrees (although sun temperatures are, of course, higher) when southeasterly breezes prevail and the great bulk of the rainfall occurs.

Bathing at all Seasons.

A sea temperature, which is never too cold and never too warm, makes sea bathing delightful and very safe at all seasons.

One of the great pleasures in Nassau is shopping in the alluring and inexpensive Old World shops. Nassau merchants import linen and woolen goods, perfumes and toilet articles from Europe and because of low duties and fair business tactics, sell them at prices which appear ridiculously cheap.

There are over 50 miles of paved and oiled roads on the Island of New Providence, which radiate from Nassau.

Cycling has come into its own again and is being increasingly enjoyed. Motor cars and bicycles can be purchased or hired from local dealers.

The herds and dairies on the Island of New Providence which supply Nassau with milk and cream are regularly inspected.

Electric light, ice and cold storage plants, telephone and telegraph services are owned and operated by the government and a water supply from wells and a drainage and sewage system are recent government installations.

On the Out Islands (designation of all the islands of the colony other than the Island of New Providence, on which is Nassau, the capital city), the visitor will be in contact with the life of the early settlers, little changed from the early days of the Carolinas and Virginia. By respecting the simplicities of the people and winning their confidence, the visitor may be rewarded with the sight of cut glass, early cabinet work and bric-a-brac brought by the Loyalists from the old American colonies. Hand-tooled ironwork can still be secured from craftsmen in quaint old forges.

Seafaring History.

Where today the visitor will see a village, in the past there was a thriving seaport and the keels of the clipper freighters of the heyday of Boston and Nantucket have come to rest by the quaysides and in the roads.

Here is the romantic setting! A white auxiliary schooner sporting a jib, staysail, fore and main-sail, her lines reminiscent of the Grand Banks, her cozy after-cabin just the place for a man's party on an outing, and with private cabins if the women folk go . . . through sponging and fishing grounds of the finest . . . into harbors where the keels of the caravels of Columbus came to rest . . . to see caves with pirate symbols pointing their way.

The tours and opportunities for sport on land and sea are for the lovers of the wilds and those who can revel in slight hardship and love "a wet sheet, a flowing sea and the wheel's kick" will have their recompense in the glamorous dawns of palm and pine and feel that magic allure which took Stevenson, Jack London and DeVere Stacpoole into southern seas.

In these islands you may stand where Columbus and the men of the Santa Maria stood to hear mass on San Salvador; see where Christophe, Haitian emperor, had his summer home; hear the twang of the bow as an Andros man shoots fish in the narrows; see herds of will cattle and asses roaming on prairie land; or walk reminiscently on paths that slave footsteps have padded across rock-ribbed islands.

Old plantation homes are in ruins amid the tangled vines that cling like immortal memories to the shattered columns. Hibiscus, poinsettia, bougainvillia and English roses—the exile's garden flower has become a "blossom in the garden of these unforgotten." Nature and romance have colored these scenes in glorious tints.

"Fight for your fish"—you like that? Then here will be the scenes of Homeric conflict. Stingray, kingfish, tarpon, whipray from 100 to 400 pounds, they await your skill and muscle. A host of finny beauties, the gorgeous dolphin included, are plentiful and seemingly inexhaustible.

700 Islands in the Group.

The Bahama Islands, one of the oldest British colonies, include nearly 700 islands and islets or cays and over 2,000 rocks, the total area of the colony being about 4,500 square miles, or one-half the size of Wales. Of this area only 595 square miles are now in private hands, in addition to the 430 square miles of Grand Bahama, which have been leased. The islands comprise a chain beginning with Grand Bahama and the Biminis, both lying on the eastern edge of the Gulf Stream, some 40 miles off the coast of Florida, and extending over some 760 miles in a southeasterly direction to Inagua, from which, on a clear day, the mountains at the eastern end of Cuba can be seen, and from which Haiti is but a day's sail farther south. They are situated between 20 degrees 56 minutes and 27 degrees 22 minutes north latitude and between 72 degrees 40 minutes and 79 degrees 20 minutes west longitude. One of their chief claims to fame is that they were the first land discovered by Columbus, one of the islands, San Salvador or Watlings, having been his landfall on October 12, 1492. Today they are a thriving colony, some 25 of the islands being inhabited.

In Nassau there are all the amenities of modern civilization, but when you start for the Out Islands you should take certain things with you. These can all be purchased in Nassau. A sun helmet or conch hat will add comfort to out of doors. Your own towels and soap, drinking water, distilled water bottled for table use. Old garments will suit best, or a khaki shirt, pants and deck shoes. A sleeping bag may be found useful. A simple field kit of antiseptics and bandages should be carried if going into the bush. A 12-bore shotgun and fishing tackle, also a light raincoat. Of course, your bathing suit.

Lecture on Old British Colony Next in Series

Second Post Travel Talk Tuesday Night Deals With Bahamas.

The second of a series of 20 travel lectures, illustrated with color and motion pictures, will be given Tuesday at the Masonic Auditorium, beginning at 8:15 p. m. The subject will be "Nassau and the Treasure Islands of the Bahamas."

Dr. Roy Waldo Miner, of the American Museum of National History, a traveler intimately acquainted with the almost 700 islands which comprise one of Great Britain's oldest colonies, will outline the history and other features of the islands and of its foremost town, to supplement scenes shown in full color, as well as the motion pictures of sporting events and other activities at the resort.

Father Neptune's Marine Gardens, native life, old plantation homes, fishing with bows and arrows, wild cattle roaming on uninhabited islands and an exciting wild boar hunt will be included in the camera views.

The series of lectures, to be presented each Tuesday night for 20 weeks, has been arranged by the Washington Travel Guild in cooperation with The Washington Post. The purpose is not merely to entertain but to give Post readers a background for the interpretation of news over the world as it is presented every day in The Washington Post.

Norway, France Panama, Germany, Switzerland, Japan, Sweden, Russia and Canada will be among the countries that Post readers may study and their customs may be observed through the camera's eye.

An additional feature of each evening's program will be a style demonstration of national costumes, together with that of apparel most appropriate for the visitor. This exhibition will be under the direction of Miss Mary G. Whiteman, prominent Washington stylist.

Because of the expenses involved in auditorium rental and other arrangements an admission charge of 25 cents is made for each lecture. Tickets may be obtained at the Masonic Auditorium box office, New York avenue at Thirteenth street.

Reserved seat season tickets for the series are available at $4.75 each at the Ober Steamship & Tourist Agency, 1420 H street northwest, or at the auditorium box office the evening of the lecture.

NRA Code Figures Reveal Scope Of Automotive Parts Industry

Leaders Recite Proof of Independence From Car Makers.

By William Ullman.

The NRA must be awarded credit for giving the country informative close-ups of the character of individual industries. In the readjustment of impressions it is apparent that general ideas held about different industries by those not engaged in them have been hazy.

Take, for example, the automotive parts and equipment industry.

The parts and equipment manufacturers in the antomotive field have been regarded largely as auxiliary to, and dependent upon, the motor car manufacturers. They were looked upon as a group engaged in the design and fabrication of isolated parts, which, when put together in Detroit, became a motor car.

The NRA hearing on the code of the automotive parts and equipment manufacturers revealed evidence to the contrary. The group concerned with the draft of that code wanted it so. They desired that the individuality of their industry be recognized.

One set of figures they used revealed the contrast between the productive volumes of the two industries during the depression year, 1932. As compared with 1928, they pointed out that motor car production was only 32 per cent in 1932; and, as compared with 1929, only 26 per cent. Parts and equipment volume in 1932 represented 61 per cent of the 1928 level and 53 per cent of that of 1929.

If the automobile industry had been the only customer, their volume would have shrunk proportionately. It did not and the manufacturers point out that the big reason is that their largest volume of business comes from car owners, the more than 20,000,000 Americans who buy parts and equipment for machines they keep constantly in operation.

Motorists Ignore Advice.

Research, like any other force, is a successful builder only through a process of destruction. Sometimes it takes a long time to destroy the ideas which must be eliminated before the new structure of knowledge can best serve the purpose of those who own and operate automobiles. Research, for instance, indicates that the best tires of an automobile should be on the rear wheels of a car; that a rear wheel blowout can be more dangerous than one in front. The majority of motorists, however, go on thinking otherwise; the old theory preventing the new research product from best serving mankind.

Practical Motor Laws.

Not all motor vehicle regulations are abstract. Michigan, for example, has a law concerning automobile brakes that is about as practical and simple as it is possible to write. It relates to the emergency brake equipment on motor vehicles and states that the system must be capable of holding the vehicle on any hill it can climb.

Bicycle Fad Growing.

Motorists who develop severe attacks of the jitters at the sight of bicycle riders are in for a hard season. The sport is coming back on a grand scale.

Motor vehicle and traffic authorities have given the situation some attention. As one help to motorists they have informed the pedalers that they are subject to the traffic regulations. Motorists might find helpful the policy of one driver who says his practice is to give cyclists "a loud signal and a wide berth."

New Brake Regulations.

Life may be getting simpler, after all. Remember those complicated tables of safe stopping distances for motor car brakes we used to have? The stopping distance in feet was stated for 20, 30, 40, and so on, miles per hour, just as if that for one speed had no relation to that for another.

That is no longer the way it's done. The latest code says that excellent four-wheel brakes will stop a car from 20 miles an hour within 20 feet, and that those which take 35 feet are definitely unsafe.

Parking Technique.

Policemen, those official observers of our parking technique, sometimes prove quite tellingly observant.

"Funny thing," one of them said to the writer the other day, "but when one driver parks too far out from the curb, the next one's likely to do the same. I've found as many as five of them in a line, all an equal—and too great—distance from the curb, because each was guided in his parking by the position of the fender of the car behind."

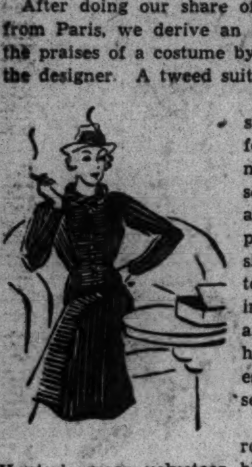
American Designer Reveals Sense of Humor With Hawser Neck on New Tweed Suit

Versatile Afternoon Dress Removes Gilet for Street

Two-Layer Beret Latest Version of Pancake Hat; Jeweled Diadems Impart Royal Glitter; Gloves Have Ruffled Gauntlets.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

After doing our share of prattling about clothes "just off the boat" from Paris, we derive an immense amount of satisfaction in shouting the praises of a costume by an American designer. Elizabeth Hawes is the designer. A tweed suit with velveteen blouse is the costume.



This Hawes person is getting altogether too smart. Not content with an unerring sense for suave casualness, practicability and enormous dash, the gal now blossoms out with a sense of humor in her creations. It's probably a violation of the antitrust law for one person to corner so many virtues in the designers' world. And if she blithely continues to get in the French couturiers' hair by beating them at their own game, we may have an international crisis just as exciting on our hands. But we're for you, Elizabeth Hawes; especially since you've put an amusing hawser neck on the blouse of your tweed suit.

Brown yarn has been twisted into a fat roll to make the hawser, which tops a Hunter's green velveteen blouse. A plump yarn tassel nestles on the blouse's bosom. Narrow inverted pleats reach from front shoulders to wide, flat peplum at the waist. The back billows a bit over the peplum, which is attached to the sides of a front panel. The sleeves of this hip-length blouse are perfectly straight with seams left open a few inches at the wrist.

One Word Describes Sleeves.

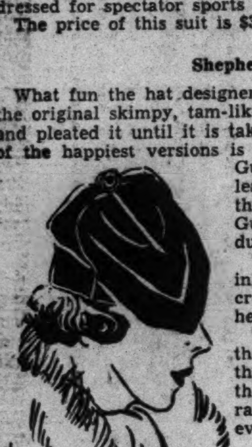
A brown and bronzine tweed mixture in a subdued stripe pattern makes the jacket and skirt. The former has the "newer than new" center front closing, outlined with thirteen large buttons and loops. The jacket repeats the blouse's lines with flat peplum at sides and back, and narrow, inverted pleats in front. The neck is high, round and youthful. And what a relief it is to be able to describe sleeves in just one word: straight.

The skirt back is plain. The front has two inverted, stitched-down pleats that are released just above the knees to give room for a swagger gait. No woman covered with this suit will be able to resist a bit of a swagger. She'll be proudly conscious of the fact that she's perfectly dressed for spectator sports or the street.

The price of this suit is $34.75.

Shepherd's Crook on Crown.

What fun the hat designers have had with the beret. They've taken the original skimpy, tam-like affair and twisted and pulled and tucked and pleated it until it is taking on the proportions of a real hat. One of the happiest versions is the layer beret, from the house of Maria Guy. There; we might have known that at least one French designer would break into this column before we had gone far. Well, Guy deserves the break as a reward for this ducky hat.



Two triangular layers make the interesting crown. The folded back is caught to the crown's center with a silvery metal shepherd's crook.

This antelope suede scamp is at its best on the younger woman as it swoops low over the left eye, revealing the entire right side of the face and hair. It's positively luscious in raspberry color. It might be copied, however, in any desired shade.

Globular Buttons on Gloves.

Long, ruffly gauntlets, on French kid gloves, are drawn tight over the wrist by a contrasting rolled leather strap. The tiny, round strap ends in a loop, which slips over a globular silver button.

Brown gloves have beige straps and beige-bordered gauntlets. Black gloves with white straps and gauntlet borders are dramatic in a nice, tailored sort of way. Price, $5.

Neither Fancy Nor Severe.

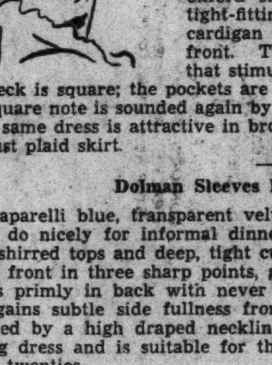
An informal afternoon dress that can double for street wear, that is neither too fancy nor too severe, is one of those blessings seldom found in this earthly realm. We could scarcely restrain a whoop of joy when we actually discovered one in a Washington department store.

Turquoise novelty rough crepe makes a removable gilet with wide bands on kimona armholes. The front, draped high across the throat, rolls softly to the back, which is slit from top to bottom. Crepe-covered buttons bring the slit together at the back of the neck and at the hipline. A turquoise, brown and silver ornament fastens a narrow, brown crepe belt.

When the gilet is removed, the high surplice line of the sable-brown, mossy-crepe dress is revealed. The sheath skirt has a hint of fullness at the bottom. Sleeves, softly draped above the elbow, fasten snugly at the wrist with covered button and deeply pointed tab. Price, $39.75.

Prystal Diadems for Evening.

Jeweled diadems impart a royal sparkle to evening coiffures. Some of them are reminiscent of gorgeous court functions in old Tzarist Russia. Others radiate girlish innocence. This little matter is determined by the material and design.



A regal affair, about an inch high, glitters with brilliants set in prystal. One side is out in a slim, double loop effect.

The wide-eyed, girlish look is achieved with a tortoise shell halo, set with brilliants and with seven brilliant-studded balls placed at intervals on top.

Another attractive one is prystal with brilliants spaced to make a leaf design.

Oxford and Eel Happily Combined.

Oxford and eel gray are an appealing combination when used for a two-piece knitted dress. The straight skirt is block plaid. The oxford slipover has a trick or two up its tight-fitting sleeve. First, it stimulates a cardigan with knit-covered buttons down the front. Then it has a narrow-ribbed band that stimulates a square yoke, front and back. The neck is square; the pockets are mere slits, and the cuffs are ribbed. The square note is sounded again by the belt buckle, wrapped with yarn.

The same dress is attractive in brown angora knit slipover and brown and rust plaid skirt.

Dolman Sleeves Have Open Tops.

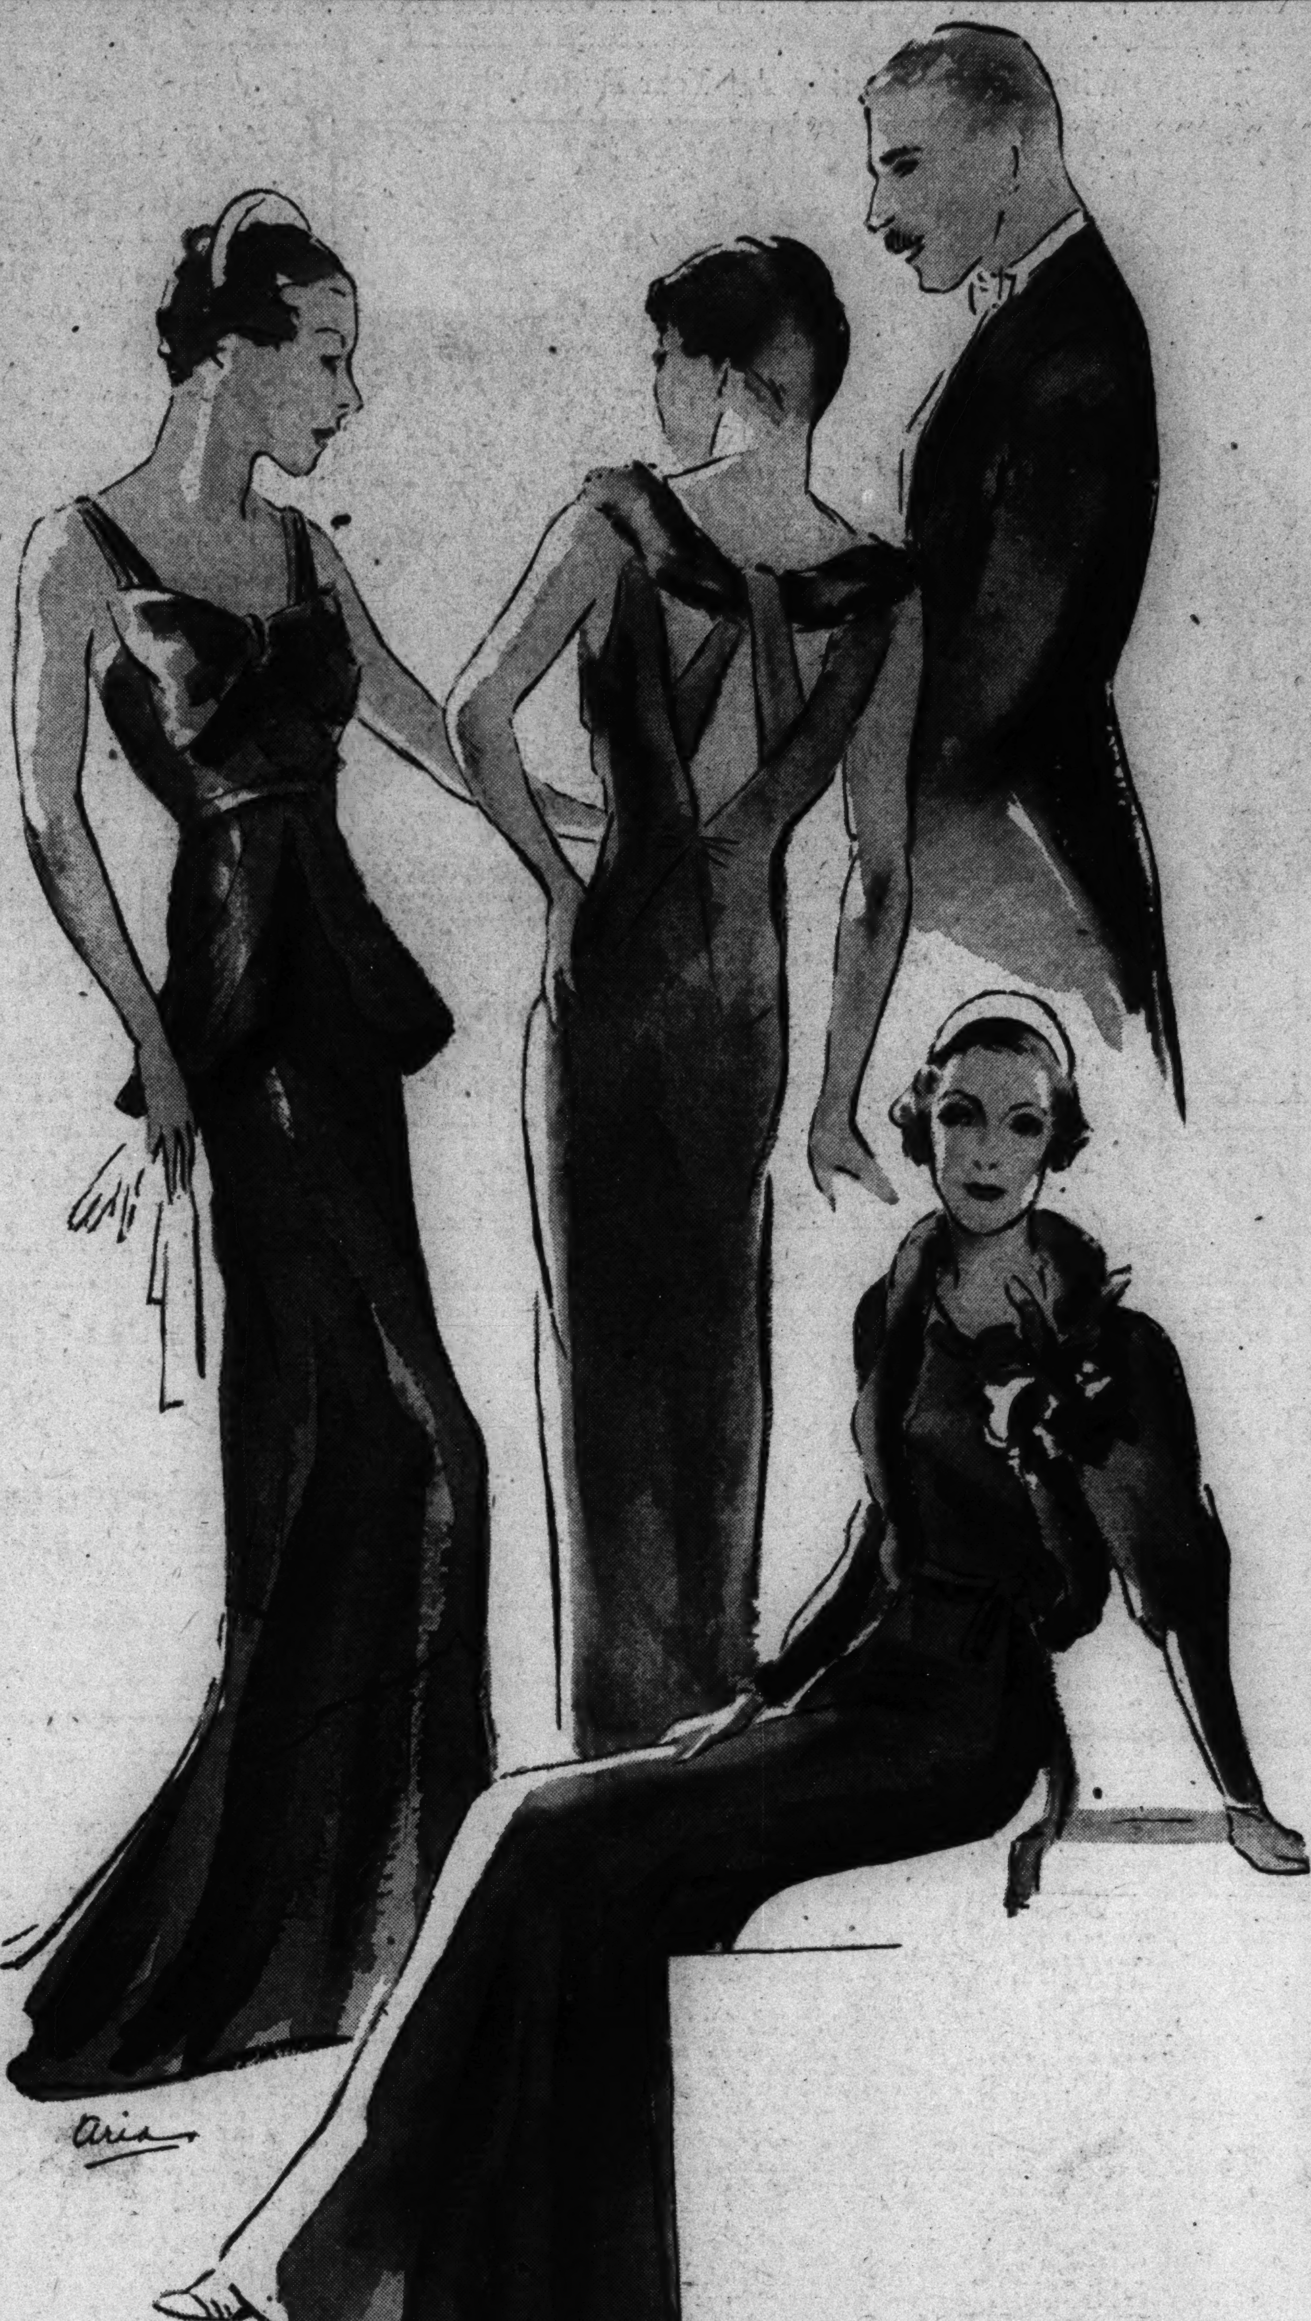
Schiaparelli blue, transparent velvet creates an afternoon gown that would do nicely for informal dinner wear. The dolman sleeves have open, shirred tops and deep, tight cuffs. A wide girdle, attached to the bodice front in three sharp points, gives a two-piece effect. The girdle fastens primly in back with never a bow or loop, or ornament. The skirt gains subtle side fullness from gores. A cowl neck in front is balanced by a high draped neckline in back. All in all, it's a good-looking dress and is suitable for the older woman as well as the girl in her twenties.

Greatcoat Battles Cold Winds.

Chilly winds may blow and cold, sleety rains may fall, but the wearer of a llama-mixture greatcoat will be cozy and warm through it all. The heavy, wooly material is gray and black checked. Huge slash pockets, deep raglan armholes, waistline belt, and strap collar make this coat style-right as well as comfortable. The strap may be left open to form wide lapels. Straps trim the sleeves, in lieu of cuffs.

Brown and white llama mixture also makes this greatcoat.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of the Woman's Department of The Washington Post, National 4205, Extension 105, for further information. Or write, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope.



A butterfly bow in front and butterfly ornaments in back lend inestimable aid to a black transparent velvet gown in capturing stellar honors in fashion's drama. A deep flounce, pointed in front, ends in a swishy train. A peplum, starting at the sides below the hips, also follows the pointed line. Emerald glass and brilliants, in butterfly ornaments, hold double, narrow double shoulder straps in back. Absinthe green suede velvet makes an intoxicating mink-necklaced gown. Vionnet undoubtedly inspired the cut of the bodice. Below its curved line the skirt, intricately gored, clings to the body in long, unbroken lines. The fur draws a shallow semicircle in front and loops about the suede velvet harness in back. This mink-trimmed gown is an especially happy choice for the woman who has a mink wrap. Beet root crystelle is used to enormous advantage in a formal ensemble. Narrow mink bands are cleverly placed so that they appear to be on the dolman-sleeved jacket when they are really on the gown itself. The princess skirt has a train attached to the center back section at the knees. Two panels, extending from shoulder to waist, partially cover the back. These panels are held at the neckline by bands of the mink. A green orchid on the jacket's shoulder adds an exotic touch. The formal sweater is Fashion in her most whimsical mood. Lastex velvet makes adorable turtleneck ones that roll softly at the bottom. Women in New York, so we've been told, wear them under lightweight evening wraps. When they remove their wrap they leave the gay little sweater on for an hour or so. Then off comes the sweater to reveal an ultraformal gown beneath. White, of course, is the ideal complement to a black velvet gown.

Ohio Girls Club Honors Official With Shower

At the first fall meeting of the Ohio Girls Club, held recently, Miss Helen Willis, daughter of the late Senator Willis, of Ohio, presented piano selections.

A talk on the Community Chest was given by Miss Louise Gregory. At the conclusion of business and the program the club honored its second vice president, Mrs. Grace Young Pickett, a recent bride, with a linen shower. The next meeting is scheduled for Friday night, November 17, at 1326 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

Women's Club to Meet With Mrs. Paul Grove

The Woman's Club of Sixteenth street Highlands held its "guest day" meeting at the home of Mrs. Henry T. Offterdinger, Kennedy place. Mrs. Lewis J. Battle presided. Dr. Allen A. Stockdale spoke on "The Message of James Whitcomb Riley," and Miss Edith Pitch entertained with piano solos.

Mrs. B. R. Stickney and Mrs. L. Z. Dalby assisted the hostess. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Paul F. Grove. Mrs. William C. Doudt will be in charge of the program.

Lovely Jewels Accent New Vogue in Fingernails

The vogue for tinted fingernails, which enjoyed a temporary popularity last year, but faded because it utterly lacked artistic guidance, has returned in a new form. Silver, violet, or cherry fingernails can not be worn, regardless of one's costume, personality, or type of beauty. This year the fingernails either must be an index of character or part of the wearer's color scheme. According to one New York beauty specialist, whose clientele includes many Park avenue socialites, shades as unusual as blue or black may be used if they are part of a definite color scheme. Thus, blue fingernails may accentuate the blue trim of a white dress. Should the entire dress be blue, fingernails of the same shade probably would be too great an accentuation of the shade, transcending good taste. The importance of dressy fingernails is stressed this year because of the vogue for jeweled hands. Rings and bracelets are returning to fashion, and the new jewelry, being larger than was formerly the fashion, brings the hands into prominence. Cluster rings and costume jewelry have an especially strong tendency to focus attention upon the dainty fingers they adorn.

The Window Shopper.

The moment prohibition repeal goes into effect, Boue Sisters, famous Paris couturiers, will show "champagne" dresses.

Sports prints for accessories show strong Mexican and Tyrolean influences.

Queer new shades, such as rose quartz, yellowish lime and orange with a coral cast will be used for lightweight woolen suits and dresses this spring. A rich cream color also shows signs of attracting popularity.

Army, Navy, Marines Utilized For Clothes Designers' Ideas

Mrs. Dall Still Sponsors Jaunty Turban-Like Military Hat.

A martial note has crept into the design of the latest fall clothes. Never since the World War days when almost every woman adopted the overseas service cap style of headgear and even had her daytime clothes cut to conform with her work uniforms, have the Army and Navy and Marine Corps been so used as inspiration for clothes designers.

The pretty daughter of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Curtis Dall, has been a consistent sponsor of the jaunty turban-like military hat ever since she made her official debut in Washington after March 4.

Not only has this jaunty style of headgear become popular, but recently one saw at every gathering of the younger set hats that may have been concocted from the very newest design of the sailors of the U. S. Navy. The bands fit far down on the heads of the girls and the "salty look" is enhanced by the softness of the tam-o'-shanter and its abbreviated size.

The newest coats have military closings, even the gold lace and braid which are associated with uniforms of the military services.

Epaulet Often Seen.

The vogue for wider shoulder effects gives a real excuse for the use of shoulder straps and epaulets on suits and coats and even wool dresses.

The military effect was particularly noticeable in the afternoon calling costumes of several young girls at a recent tea. No girl willingly grows up to the high estate of debutanteship without regarding a velvet afternoon costume as her "right." These rights have been recognized this year, it would seem, for every other one of the dressy costumes for afternoon worn by the younger set appear to be of velvet, with dresses that "swish" about the ankles and natty little buttoned-up military-type coat. Intriguing hats to match borrowed from a soldier or sailor boy's uniform often complete these costumes.

Even military heels appear on the shoes worn with these costumes. Of course, no service man would wear his heels as high or the vamps of his shoes so short and so low cut.

Somehow Mrs. Roosevelt's penchant for blue seems to fit with entertainments in the state rooms of the White House. This was particularly apparent at the first of the series of teas given for the "career women" in Government departments last week. Mrs. Roosevelt wore a gown of lustrous bright blue satin crepe softened with collar and cuffs of plaited cream chiffon finished with cream lace. About her throat Mrs. Roosevelt wore her beautiful strand of graduated torquoise.

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, also is wearing a blue satin crepe gown. Her gown is of a deeper and darker tone than Mrs. Roosevelt's and has tailored collar and cuffs of cream lace. With this Mrs. Hull wears a small brushed felt blue hat. Mrs. Hull looked smart at one of the luncheons in a dress of bright golden brown woolen material with a silky rough finish. This is made in a rather formal effect and is edged with mink. With this she wears a sable coat and a small brown felt hat.

Mme. Prochnik's Costumes.

Mme. Prochnik, wife of the Minister of Austria, who is one of the best-dressed women in the Diplomatic Corps, has many smart costumes this fall. She was seen at a dinner party recently in a dress of white crepe with a dull gloss finish made very long and very close-fitting, with a wide flounce at the hem held out by crinoline. The hem of the skirt and the scarf, high in the front and tied very low in the back, faced with red velvet. A huge rose of red velvet marked the waistline.

Mrs. William Phillips, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State, was effective in a gown of black and white lace at a reception. This is made with wide flounces at the hem and a scarf tied in the back with the ends forming a train.

The pretty blonde wife of the Minister of Canada, Mrs. William Duncan Herridge, has adopted the new green for her fall street costume. This is made of green wool, with a dress on tailored lines and a smart seven-eighths length coat. With this she wears a hat of matching coque feathers, fitting closely to the head and worn on one side. Her scarf is of striped material, varicolored, but with green predominating.

Mrs. Fred Britton is wearing one of the new evening dresses with rather startling, if brief, wing-like stiff sleeves. These are smaller but something on the order of those worn by the women of the Philippines when they are in native dress. Mrs. Britten's gown is of cloth-of-gold of a sheer, supple variety and is fitted closely to her figure except for the wide effect at the hem. The sleeves are of stiff red tulle.

The charm of a well-cut black satin evening gown was noted at a recent dinner, when Mme. de Laboulaye, wife of the Ambassador of France, wore such a costume. It is cut rather high in the front and low in the back and has a long pointed train.

Boucle Frocks Recommended For Spring Wear

Women Advised They Will Be Comfortable in Late Winter.

Those who like to select their spring clothes before the collections have been pawed over are safe in choosing a formal knit boucle frock. They're fashion-right for resort wear as well as for the fag-end of winter, when a bit of brightness is sorely needed. These new boucles are stunning in brilliant red or glory blue. They're also made in turquoise, pink and white, as well as in rosy rust, bluish green, chona brown and bronze green.

Contrasting yokes are enormously chic. Eggshell yoke and pansy dress make a radiant combination. Gold and chona brown create a rich symphony. And then there is that old standby, white yoke and black dress. Eggshell also combines beautifully with bronze or rosy rust.

The two-piece dress rules the formal boucle world, and shows no signs of being pushed off its throne. Delicate lace work usually distinguishes the upper part of the blouse and the high necklines are much in evidence. The woman with prominent collarbones is certainly having her innings these days. It's an unusual dress that doesn't come right up under the chin.

Boucle is beautifully adapted to this hug-the-throat style. It drapes subtly for cowls or lends itself nicely to flat Chinese collars with buttons at the side.

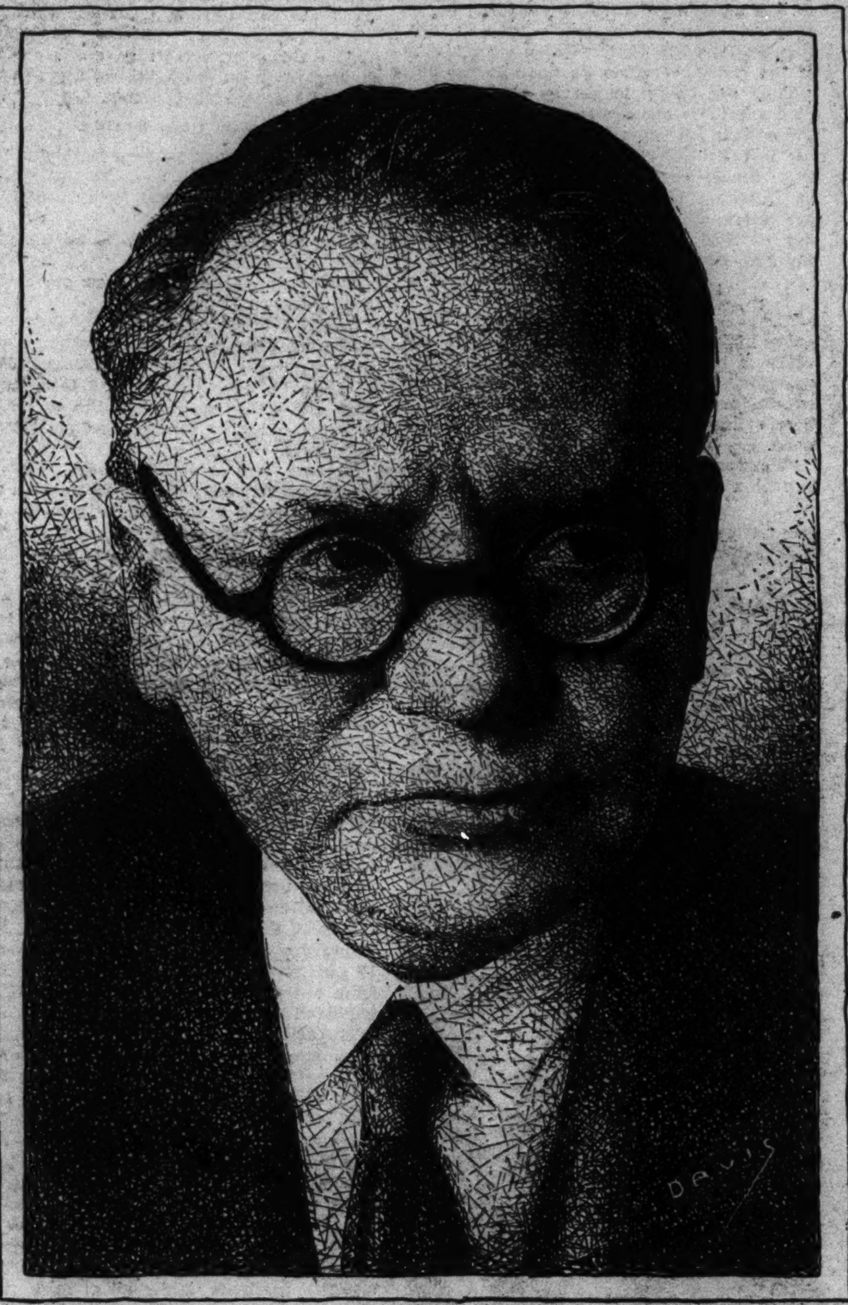
Russian Revolutionist's Life Abounds In Colorful Adventures

By Leo M. Glassman.



MAXIM MAXIMOVITCH LITVINOFF,
People's commissar for foreign affairs of the Soviet Union

IT was during the years touching on the turn of the present century. In the Polish town of Bialistok, in the heart of the Ghetto, lived a youth named Meyer Wallach. He was extremely religious, wore the traditional side curls and studied in the synagogue school. There was nothing to distinguish him from other youths, except perhaps the dreamy faraway look in his eyes and the barely perceptible shade of irony which never left his lips.

His parents had mapped out a rabbinical career for him, but because of his indifferent talents as a student, he was apprenticed as a clerk in the establishment of a cloth merchant. It was taken for granted that he would make good as a merchant.

But, all unknown to his kin, something was happening in the soul of the young Meyer. Tight-lipped, uncommunicative, he took to disappearing from home of evenings in a secretive manner. Was he keeping a romantic tryst of love? The great mystery was cleared up one day when Meyer was arrested for seditious activity against the czar.

Early Life Like Stalin's.

That was the beginning of one of the most amazing and adventurous careers in the history of the Russian revolution. Meyer Wallach changed his name to Maxim Litvinoff, enlisted under the Marxian banner of Nikolai Lenin, and became a haunting terror to the czar's police.

Today, Litvinoff is visiting the United States as the distinguished people's commissar for foreign affairs of Russia. He is the diplomatic representative of 165,000,000 people living under a new social order, in the founding of which he played an important part during those epochal ten days that shook the world in the fall of 1917.

This fantastic transition from religion to revolution, from rabbinical student to Bolshevik statesman, is paralleled only in the case of Joseph Stalin, Russia's man of steel. By a curious coincidence, Stalin in his youth had likewise been marked out for the priesthood. At about the same time when Litvinoff was poring over the Talmud in the synagogue school of Bialistok, Stalin was studying his catechism in the Greek Orthodox Seminary of Tiflin. Both have ended as leaders of a godless state.

The Past Shut Away.

Like Stalin, Litvinoff does not speak about his pre-Communist background. Good Bolsheviks never do. The past exists for them only as a point from which to date the beginning of revolutionary activity. For Litvinoff, that point was at the age of 24, when he first fell into the clutches of the czar's police.

Just what it was that caused Litvinoff to abandon a life of religion for a life of revolution, what inner forces or external circumstances were responsible for the astonishing change in him, has not been made clear. His surviving relatives—an older brother in Lodz and a first cousin in Bialistok, are well-to-do merchants and have remained exceedingly religious—do not seem to be able to explain the metamorphosis of their famous kin.

But it is known that once Litvinoff took the road of revolution he never for a moment swerved from the new course.

Unchanging in Purpose.

When he was incarcerated the first time his father, old Moses Wallach, rushed frantically from one czarist official to another, sparing neither effort nor money, until he secured his son's release on parole.

The family then applied the customary methods of moral suasion and other forms of pressure to lead the erring youth back to the straight and narrow path. They thought he was suffering from a temporary aberration. But within a few short weeks, Litvinoff was back behind prison bars.

From then on it was one long uninterrupted series of subrosa activities, punctured by prison terms, Siberian exile, escapes abroad, persecution by the police of Europe. No matter where he went or into what strange circumstances life thrust him, Litvinoff never lost sight of his revolutionary goal. Whether he was working as a journalist or as an architect's assistant in London, whether he was living under a false passport in Russia or traveling as a salesman in England under the alias of "Mr. Harrison," he used every opportunity, great and small, to advance the cause of Russian revolution.

With this tenaciousness of will and singlemindedness of purpose, Litvinoff combines a natural gift for diplomacy. He can make concessions without forgetting his ultimate aim, and he has a trick for turning a compromise to his own eventual advantage. In this, he resembles his chief, Stalin. Unlike Bolsheviks of Trotsky's type, whose tremendous personal pride and intellectual conceit have caused them to underestimate the value of political strategy, Litvinoff knows how to play the game according to the particular exigencies of the situation.

This trait has helped him out of many a tight spot. Two instances stand out especially. Once, when the World War broke out, Litvinoff, who was at that time living in England, was arrested on a charge of conducting espionage activities against the allies. He thereupon protested his Russian patriotism so well and with such apparent sincerity that he was quickly released. The British authorities were completely taken in.

This had a curious sequel. Immediately following the October revolution, the czarist representatives and White Guard refugees in London, remembering Litvinoff's eloquent protestations of Russian loyalty, offered to engage his services to help them keep their front against the Bolsheviks. Litvinoff readily accepted the offer and at once proceeded to transmit all the White Guard secrets he could lay his hands on to Moscow. The czarists were not a little surprised one day when Litvinoff suddenly announced that the Kremlin had appointed him Soviet Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

Avoids Party Feud.

The second instance concerns the Stalin-Trotsky feud. Litvinoff at one time was strongly suspected of being a Trotskyist. Yet he is the only important figure on Stalin's list of Left Wing suspects who has managed successfully to weather the tumultuous storms of intraparty strife and to rise steadily to higher honors and prestige under Stalin's tutelage.

During his many years of residence in England, Litvinoff cultivated a great fondness for that country. And he has acquired to perfection the British art of quiet but self-assured, relentless bargaining, which fits well into the framework of his tenacious character. He always has a convincing answer in reserve. He gave an excellent demonstration of this talent as early as 1921. He was then head of the Soviet delegation which had been commissioned to reach an agreement with Herbert Hoover regarding the supplying of American food to the Russian victims of the great famine. The negotiations were long and difficult and often irritating to the Americans. On one occasion, a member of Hoover's delegation, losing patience with Litvinoff's haggling and objections, exclaimed with exasperation:

"After all, Mr. Litvinoff, all we are trying to do is to send food into Russia."

"But food is a weapon!" Litvinoff retorted.

Wed to English Woman

That cynical retort was not uttered for effect nor was it an indication of callousness on Litvinoff's part. He was speaking not as an individual, but as the mouthpiece of a new ideology. He was interested primarily, not in bread for the starving Russians, but in preserving and strengthening the Soviet regime through which alone, in his conviction, the masses can attain a condition of Utopian happiness and social justice, unparalleled anywhere else in the world. Litvinoff would brook no interference with the achievement of this ideal.

In his private life, Litvinoff is thoroughly human. There is nothing of the hard doctrinaire about him. Rotund, pink-faced and radiating an abundance of energy, he resembles a genial bon vivant rather than the hardworking, self-denying Bolshevik leader that he is. That he does not allow his Bolshevist ideology to interfere with his personal loyalties and attachments has been demonstrated best perhaps in the case of his wife, Ivy Low Litvinoff.

Mme. Litvinoff is English, the niece of Sir Sidney Low, the historian and author of "The Political History of the Reign of Queen Victoria." She is also related to the late Sir Maurice Low, who was Washington correspondent of the London Morning Post. She is herself a writer of some talent, having written several novels and numerous magazine articles.

There is nothing particularly proletarian about Mme. Litvinoff's appearance or behavior, though no one can question the sincerity of her Bolshevist ideals. But she is essentially a well-bred English lady, brilliant, witty and vivacious, who sometimes says and does things that cut against the grain of the more literal-minded, unhumorists Communist.

Party Dislikes His Wife.

In certain Communist circles there has been for years a keen resentment against the unproletarian Mme. Litvinoff, and pressure has been brought to bear time and again on the foreign affairs commissar to divorce her.

In 1929, an article which she published in the bourgeois Berliner Tageblatt (according to Bolshevist creed, it is a cardinal sin for a Communist to write for bourgeois publications) aroused special indignation, and one Communist organ remarked cynically: "It is time that the house cleaning which our Communist party brothers are carrying out in all Soviet institutions be extended to those 'Soviet little ladies' who, in Europe missuse their adherence to the Soviet Union. Clean her out, clean her out, Comrade Litvinoff!"

Despite these sinister warnings—and no one who is familiar with the workings of Communist ideology in Russia will underestimate the seriousness of such pressure—Litvinoff has not flinched in his exemplary loyalty to his wife.

But while he allows his wife certain liberties, Litvinoff knows where to draw the line. He keeps himself strictly within the limits of proletarian decorum.

The Proletarian Litvinoff.

He never uses the big limousine which the government has placed at his disposal, except for state purposes. His formal clothes and manners are reserved for the occasions when he attends conferences abroad or receives foreign diplomatic representatives in the magnificent foreign office reception house. Otherwise, no glamour surrounds the life and activities of the commissar of foreign affairs. His daily existence is as simple as that of any Soviet citizen.

The Litvinoffs occupy a modest four-room apartment. Actually, they are limited to three rooms, for the kitchen is likewise the home of their servant.

I met Mme. Litvinoff once at a social gathering in the home of Eugene Lyons, United Press representative in Moscow. In the course of the conversation, Mme. Litvinoff heard me say that I was tired of living in a hotel (I had been staying at the Grand Hotel for five months). She turned to me and said:

"We are moving to a new apartment and I would consider renting you one of our rooms."

That was just before the Litvinoffs moved into their present quarters; prior to that they had occupied a three-room apartment.

Family Income $67 Weekly.

Though I was unable for certain reasons to avail myself of this opoprtunity, I was not a little surprised that a high cabinet member of an important government should want to sublet a room. Yet it was not difficult to understand this when one remembers that the combined salaries of Commissar and Mme. Litvinoff—she teaches school in Moscow—total 135 rubles (about $67 at the official rate of exchange) per week! And part of this goes into the Communist party fund in the form of a tax which every member must pay!

Litvinoff works from 12 to 14 hours a day, and often longer. He is one of the busiest diplomats in the world. For over a decade he has been responsible for Russia's foreign affairs, first as vice commissar and later as commissar. He never attends a diplomatic conference abroad without achieving some concrete results. When he returned from the ill-fated London Economic Conference with a heap of new treaties under his arm the barometer of his fame and prestige took a sudden upward leap that might well be the envy of other statesmen.

It remains to be seen what he will accomplish in Washington. But if he succeeds, as seems very likely, in securing the renewal of diplomatic relations between the United States and Russia, it will undoubtedly be the crowning achievement of his career. And while his own countrymen are not interested in individual success as such, Americans, not content with a cold objective appraisal, will be quick to recognize the dramatic element in Litvinoff's personal career, his glamorous rise from an obscure ghetto boy to the heights of successful statesmanship.

7 Million Uniformed Nazi Girls Stage Dress Parades in Reich

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

BERLIN—Nazi girls, seven million strong, march the streets of Germany to the greater glory of their dapper hero.

Neatly uniformed in close-fitting brown leather coats, navy skirts, white shirts with four-in-hand black ties knotted into a leather ring and pinned with a swastika, with insignia cords to mark their rank, they look the nucleus of an Amazon army.

The "Hitler girls" are busy making speeches, holding meetings, distributing literature to any stray uninformed, bivouaking in the country. They have also a special function, projected by Hitler, which the majority of the girls themselves do not know.

They are being bought by a uniform to give a greater appearance of mass strength. Their help in spreading Nazi doctrine is far less valued than the heartening array they make, carrying the flags and songs of Hitlerism to the public squares. They are estimated as nearly equalling the number of Nazi men. They therefore double the Nazi flavor of any crowd.

Hitler Window-Dressing.

The girls are in general unaware that their prime object is to dress the stage. They are eager to help their cause actively, and are somewhat baffled to reconcile the work they expect to do for Hitler with the home-and-hearth life he has recently prescribed for them.

"We want to help Hitler. We don't want to cook and keep house," a typical Nazi girl says. She has held down a job, and the new trend of promoting marriage and taking women out of business doesn't appeal to her in this time of feeding a nation fire.

Small boys are given knives, carved in red on the blade "Blut und Ehre,"—blood and honor. You can find them in the belt or boot of every young Nazi. Older boys drill, are given uniforms, discipline and work in pattern of their bigger brothers. Nazi men are knit into a notoriously weaponless army, while weapons are displayed for any future contingency in convenient and numerous windows. Small wonder that the Nazi girls are not turning contentedly to their stoves and thimbles. They are expected to follow Hitler, preach Hitler, costume Hitler; but not to strain themselves in any endeavor beyond marching and talking.

How Girls Qualify.

"How do you get to be a Nazi girl?" one was asked.

"Be a good Hitler girl for a month."

"What does that mean?"

"Oh, we just have to go to all the meetings."

"What do you do when you get to be a Nazi girl?"

"I get a uniform."

Getting the uniform is the ranking prize for present-day German "maedchens." Many of them do not think beyond that, though they enjoy the singing and the cheers, the midnight marches through darkened streets and roads.

Beyond the exterior forms, the girl "troops" rarely take the inside track in anything active. But their importance in adding numbers and voices has its place. With great skill, the Nazis cover the country with their emblems. There seems to be a flag on every push-cart, a flash of red, white and black, with glaring swastika on every corner. Movies are spiked with shots of Hitler addressing vast crowds. Nazis are constantly dashing about on some important-seeming business, at least publically covering ground. In such a determined effort to spread the gospel, 7,000,000 Nazi maidens have room to shout.

Glowing With Eagerness.

They do shout. They glow with eagerness. They parade sturdily about, their uniforms, energetic bodies and close-cut hair making them look trim. They don't realize the passiveness of their part. As much as they can, they band solidly together. Each "bund deutscher maedchen" is composed of 15 girls and a captain. Two of these groups from a troop. Cities are divided into districts, with many troops in each.

The Nazi girls parallel to some extent the trips into the country taken by the men. Nazi men meet in the country each Sunday, where they dig trenches, drill, learn wall-scaling under the guise of obstacle races and practice anything that may some day come in handy. A law is about to be passed, which will require all the sports clubs to send contingents of their members to a similar harmless-sounding day in the fields once a month. Every member of the countless sports clubs will be adept in these unusual pastimes. Nazi girls have their camping trips and outdoor meetings. They may resemble Girl Scouts in the country, but in the cities, or massed anywhere for a demonstration, they have no American equivalent.

Vengeance Theme Ablaze.

In the main, the Hitler girls speak of Germany's economic program; of the unification of the people for the country's strength. But they are proudly "Hitler" girls. And as such subscribe to a program that has installed recruiting stations on numberless streets, ablaze with pictures of war devastation calling for vengeance; with exhibitions of bombs and parts of planes shot down in the last war; with miniature lay-outs of a war-stormed countryside; with a poster portraying Germany as a chained giant, "Versailles Treaty" charcoaled over his head, with a padlock on each chain labeled "article 231," and a vulture tearing at his vitals.

Hitler storm troops are disclaimed as an army; posters proclaim "Whoever is not with us is our enemy." Children are patted on the head by Hitler, to be a cherished event in their infant memories; German small boys are playing with paper helmets. Toy hand grenades that are sold in Nazi stores go off with a bang that would shame a giant firecracker. Up and down the streets, from city to city, Nazi stores display uniforms, knives, military equipment.

Meanwhile the Nazi girls march, and refuse to cook. Hitler girls believe that woman's place is on the band wagon.

Weight of wars lie on your foreheads,
Dusts of death are in your eyes,
You may smile in the hereafter,
Knowing that the suns that rise

And set above you bring no dawning—
We may hear the war-bird scream
Again—but you will not remember,
You will sleep, and never dream.

2. If I Should Meet a Ghost.

Yes, I would tramp at night between
Cool crosses were I not afraid
To brush the cloaks of vagrant souls
Who seek a little silent shade.

Yes, I am timid—should I meet
A ghost beneath this star-flecked sky
Would he be friendly, stop and speak,
Or, like the living, pass me by?

Generals of the former ages
Strolled with solemn dignity
Through these rounded pillars—ladies
Swished in satins, lyrically—

Once the minuet's quaint music
Led the dancers on the floor—
Now sightseers troop impatient
Through the general's ancient door.

4. Unknown Tomb.

Still your voices, you who walk
Beside his bed.
Bear your heads, you living; though
The un-named dead
Rest in darkened silence, you
Have life instead.

Are the pallid wreaths that kings
In homage tossed
Upon this stone enough to pay
Eternal cost?
How can nations' tears return
The life he lost?

Childe Hassam Reaches 74.

Congratulations were sent last week from many artists in Washington and from all over the world to Childe Hassam, American painter and etcher, who celebrated his seventy-fourth birthday at his Egypt Lane studio in East Hampton, Long Island. Mr. Hassam is one of the early exponents of impressionism in art and his recent portraits maintain this style. Like his friend, the late Gari Melchers, this artist has kept abreast of the times, but has also maintained independence in his idea of what is and what is not good art.

Riding to Hounds Real "Sport of Kings" in Virginia

Baying of Pack Echoes Back to Vivid Era of Colonial Hunts.

Here they go—on their way to give Reynard a run for his life.

NORTHERN VIRGINIA has always gone in for fox-hunting in the grand manner. Because of this, several schools of thought have developed.

One school, lovers all of peace and tranquillity, fails to see any fun in a lot of persons—men and women—surrounded by a bevy of bow-wows, chasing lovely foxes over the landscape.

Another school, holders of pretentious real estate, is seeking other localities, putting up homes for sale—to get away from the baying of hounds in the early morning.

Still another school, riders of horses and followers of the hounds, believe fox-hunting to be the sport of sports. These are the folk who have made northern Virginia the mecca of the old sportsmanship; for they were riding to hounds, suh, in Virginia when the 13 original colonies were just about getting on their feet.

Whatever the various schools of thought think—some being for, and some against—the fact remains that Virginia is now all agog over the fox-hunt.

A Tradition in Virginia.

While they are chasing fox all over Virginia, that part of the Old Dominion nearest Washington hears the clatter of hoofs more clearly, the bay of the hounds, and the panting breath of the pursued.

The fox-hunt season has just begun.

Certain residents of the neighborhood complain. These are the late sleepers. Another element says it's Okey. There you are.

While the debate goes on, the nimble-footed animal called Old Brer Fox, is having a merry time of it. His tongue hangs loosely as he skips from gulch to hillside, wading across streams in advance of the big men and women on horseback—outriders, with packs of hound dogs baying and bouncing down the valley.

It's good fun, all right, even if it does develop two sides to an age-old question. Some like it and some do not.

A widely known cartoonist, who recently bought a vast estate out in Virginia, and who has some 2,000 acres down near Mount Vernon, recently served notice on the country-side that he is going to move—back to New York City, where everything is calm and peaceful-like; where they have subways and L's, but no fox-hunting.

Fox-hunting in Virginia is a tradition. It has long been an outstanding pastime in Loudoun, Fauquier, Clarke, Warren, Orange, Culpeper, Fairfax and Prince William Counties to "follow the hounds" over the thicketed fields and through forest in which the coveted red fox has for untold years held his lair.

George Washington and Thomas Lord Fairfax, the English gentleman who built a lodge, Greenway Court, on the western frontier in the eighteenth century, first hunted foxes in the mountains of Frederick County (that portion which is now a part of Clark County) which still remains a favorite rendezvous of the fox.

After setting up his hunting abode at Greenway Court, Lord Fairfax lived the life of a leisurely English gentleman. Fairfax's chief amusement in those colonial days of the eighteenth century, when amusement was scarce, was fox-hunting, and commentators on his avocation declare that in the pursuit of this exercise he frequently carried his hounds to distant parts of the country and entertained every gentleman of good character and decent appearance who attended him in the field or at the inn where he took up his residence for the hunting season.

Piedmont the Oldest Hunt.

The oldest of the recognized hunts in Virginia is the Piedmont, at Upperville, Fauquier County, founded in 1840. The Albemarle gentleman, we are told, hunted foxes in 1854 but their band was not an organized hunt.

The Piedmont Hunt was established by the late Col. Richard H. Dulany, master of "Old Welbourne," near Upperville, now the home playground of the Loundoun-Fauquier polo team, and at the time of its inception the hunt had Loudoun, Fauquier and Rappahannock Counties as its hunting ground. Col. Dulany's name still stands out in the hunting, horse and colt show world for it was he who in 1953 established the Upperville Colt and Horse Show, the oldest exhibition of its kind in the United States. The show, a favorite place for huntsmen to exhibit their prized stock and young hopefuls, is held each year at Grafton, another of the Dulany estates near Upperville.

Gentlemen huntsmen of the Piedmont soon migrated to other sections of Virginia and their guests who had hunted over the Upperville sector saw the pleasure of fox-hunting more vividly with the result that a string of fox hunts has grown up in the Old Dominion with the power to attract more people to the field as the years have passed.

Among the hunts organized since the inception of the Piedmont are Oak Ridge, founded in 1887; the Warrenton, in 1889, which absorbed the private pack of the late Mr. James K. Maddux; the Deep Run, in 1883; the Blue Ridge, in 1888; the Loudoun County, in 1894; the Keswick, in 1896; the Orange County, in 1900. While these hunts are among the older, in recent years the Middleburg, Foxcatcher at Orange, and Mrs. Larabee's at The Plains have attracted widespread attention.

English Hounds Brought to U. S.

Back in 1905 when fox hunting was becoming more and more the vogue for ladies and gentlemen of leisure, it was decided to experience the advantages of hunting with both English and American hounds. In order to carry out this program, an arrangement was made with Mr. A. Henry Higgenson, master of fox hounds of the Middlesex Hunt, in New England, to bring his pack of 100 English hounds to the Fauquier section, where the hunting devotees would follow the "foreign pack" three days a week and the American hounds of the Loudoun and Piedmont hunts two days a week. The American hounds of the Piedmont were under the direction of Harry W. Smith, master of the Piedmont hunt, and a native of Worcester, Mass. Huntsmen now living, who remember the exciting hunts with the two packs, report that the English hounds were equally as good as the Americans except for good trailing, in which the "home folks" excelled. After the American hounds showed this slight superiority they gained eminence in northern Virginia, and to this day the packs are in the main American-bred.

One of the peculiarities of fox hunting in the Old Dominion today is that it is carried on over estates highly improved and modernized and through farm lands cultivated on a widespread scale. By reason of these existing conditions, the first question which comes to the mind of the observer is how is this sport maintained on such a lavish scale in a land where, presumably, the people live from the soil.

If you doubt that fox hunting is popular in the Old Dominion, even among the so-called "dirt farmers," take a jaunt through northern Virginia one day and stop at some farmer's home just after the hunstman, hunter and hounds have ridden across his place, sweeping over pasture land and cultivated fields in search of the coveted red fox.

Many Farmers Congregate.

Ask the farmer why he allows the fox hunter to traverse his place, why he has allowed the organized fox hunts to panel the farmer's acres, or why he makes little or no objection when the coveted Sir Reynard visits the farmer's turkey or chicken roost and enjoys a meal of luscious fresh fowl.

When you ask the farmer such a question, no doubt he will tell you but one story—that the wealth and well-being of a large part of the citizenry of northern Virginia is due largely to the organized fox hunts.

Fox hunting is essentially a sport of men and women of leisure. All of the organized fox hunts are careful in their selection of members. Initiation fees and annual membership dues are in vogue not only to support the fox hunts on a lavish scale but also to recompensate the farmer for any damage to his fields occasioned by the chase and for the fowls which the fox destroys. With the advent of fox hunting as a popular sport and the influx of many persons from Northern States to seek pleasure over the Southern terrain, land values jumped in the Old Dominion. The increase in land values was the first step toward bringing wealth and well-being to the general citizenry of northern Virginia.

Land that a few years back sold for $50 an acre has been known to bring as high as $200 per acre when sought as an ideal site for a hunting lodge. Even in days of depression, there has been a goodly demand for farms in the heart of the fox-hunting section of Virginia.

But the mere purchase of land for hunting lodges has not been the only source of wealth which fox hunting has brought to northern Virginia. Next after the purchase of land has come pretentious building pro-

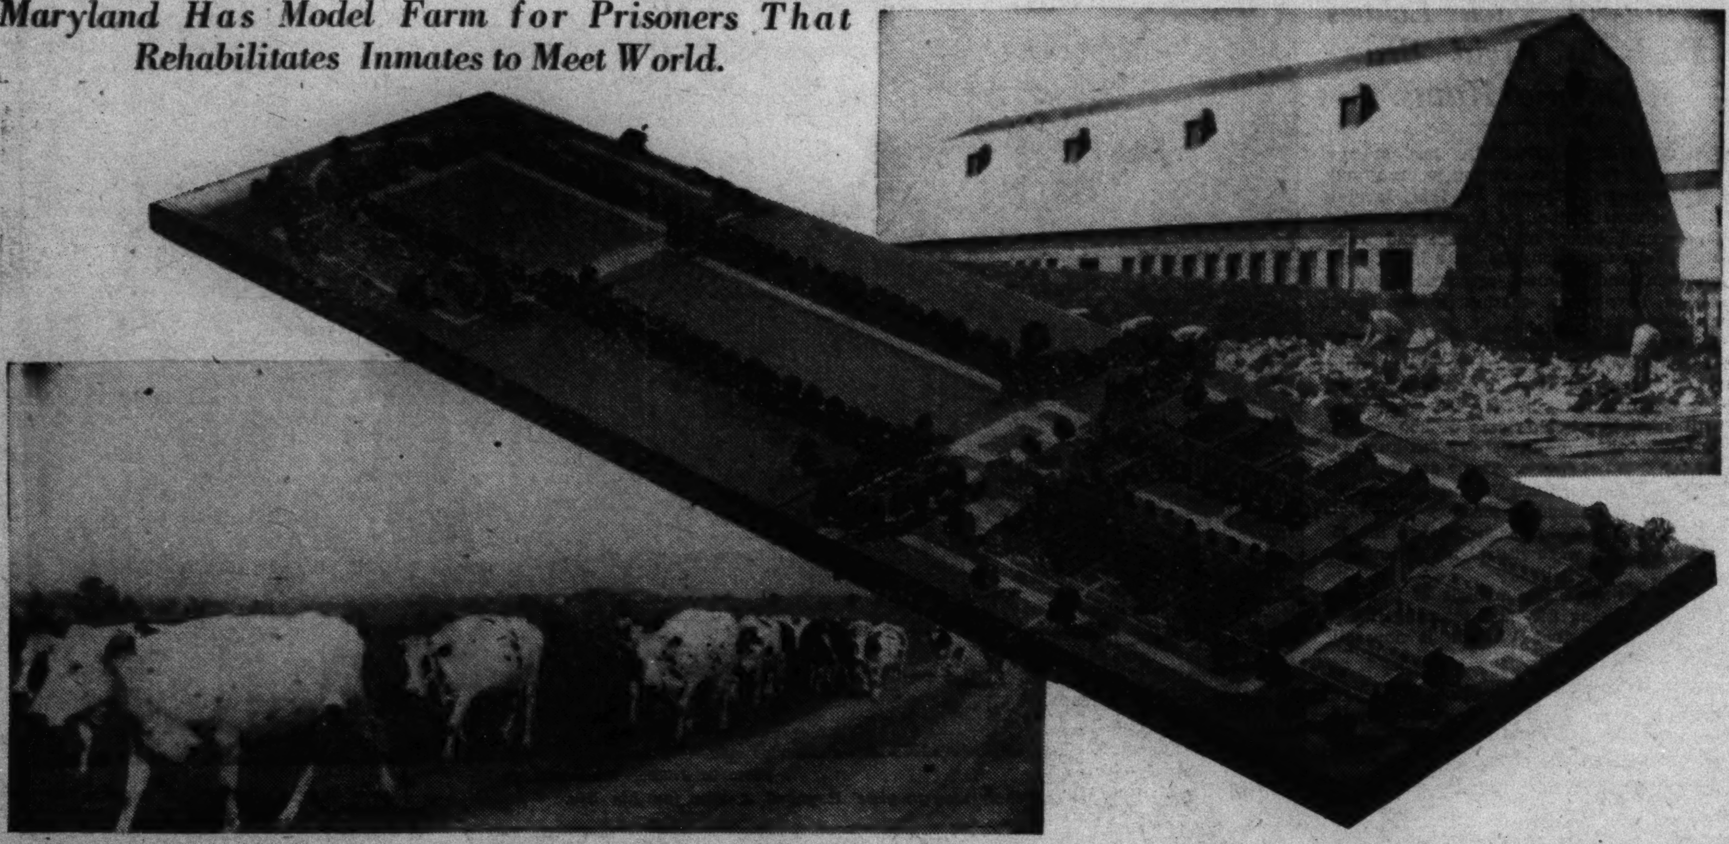
Experiment in Penology Is a Brilliant Success

Maryland Has Model Farm for Prisoners That Rehabilitates Inmates to Meet World.



Prize herd of cows at Roxbury.

Projection of Maryland Model Penal Farm.

Upper, View of farm showing new barns.

MARYLAND, My Maryland, has a model penal farm at Roxbury, 6 miles south of Hagerstown—in the western portion of the Free State.

There is probably nothing like it in all America.

The Roxbury Institute—for want of a better name—is a combination agricultural college, sanitarium, welfare home and recreation center.

Established less than three years ago, as a great experiment, it now has won the admiration of sociologists, penologists and other students of human affairs.

From the portals of this unique institution, which is not in the strictest sense an institution, men who have encountered the law walk—at the end of their terms—with heads up and chests out, to confront the wide, wide world on a plane of equality.

Members of the Roxbury alumni have taken their places in the ranks of honored men.

Old-time keepers of prisons frowned on the Maryland experiment when it was first broached, throwing up their hands in horror. They are now taking their hats off to Roxbury.

No longer an experiment, Roxbury is a success.

Doomed to failure in the eyes of the experts, Roxbury is now attracting favorable attention from various State and Federal penal officials.

Some of the important features worked out at Roxbury are about to be adopted by outstanding jails and penitentiaries from Maine to California.

Here are the facts:

No Prison Complexes.

Nearly 600 men, who have been graduated from the farm, their debt to society paid, have stepped back into the world without a prison complex, no longer liabilities to society, but assets. Started in the right direction at the prison farm, the behavior of most of them since they were returned to society has fulfilled the hopes of prison authorities in Maryland.

Just who first conceived the idea of a prison farm in Maryland where prisoners could be rehabilitated is not certain. Much of the credit is given to Col. Stuart S. Janney, director of welfare, a man who, after a distinguished service in the World War, came back to Maryland and was summoned by Gov. Albert C. Ritchie to take over and find a solution to the troublesome problem of its prison population. Maryland's penitentiary in Baltimore was filled with dozens of desperate criminals who daily came in contact with first offenders. The State's house of correction was little better. Each year scores of men, some of them greater menaces to society than when they entered, were turned free again, this time with minds more warped than when they came there.

The question was the subject of intensive study by Col. Janney, Harold E. Donnell, State superintendent of prisons, and their assistants. The prison farm idea was conceived and the Legislature three years ago appropriated $900,000 to begin the experiment.

Chaplain as Superintendent.

First a group of seven adjoining farms was purchased in western Maryland, 865 acres in all. Unlike most prison appointments, where the post of warden is handed out to some deserving politician, who also qualified because he perhaps had a reputation of being two-fisted and could swing a club well, Col. Janney selected a minister as superintendent of the experiment, a man whom he had observed both while under fire in France and later as chaplain at the Maryland Penitentiary. Hal T. Kearns, who for years had been a close student of prison reform and a man who believes that there is plenty of good in every man if properly handled, has been superintendent of the farm since it opened in March, 1931.

Mr. Kearns' selection, apparently, is one of the things that removed the prison from the experimental stage and the things he has accomplished have opened the eyes of some of the more skeptical, who believed that a prison without lock, bar, wall or guards, never was possible.

Superintendent Kearns does not call his institution a prison farm. Let him describe it in his own words:

"This is not a prison, but a school for the rehabilitation of men who have gone wrong. It is a place where they may be taught straight thinking, emotional control and self-respect and where habits of industry are taught them. We have no guards here, but instructors, each an expert in some line of endeavor, who teach the men some trade so that when they are again returned to society, they will be able to take a place there.

"When a man is sent here, from either the Maryland Penitentiary or the House of Correction, he starts as a day laborer with pick and shovel. It is soon evident whether or not he is a fit subject for our school. His willingness to work and learn will soon assert itself. Then we have a placement or classification committee, made of myself, the assistant superintendent, the farm superintendent and the construction superintendent, which selects the work for which we feel the man is most suited. He may qualify for the dairy construction department or for one of the many other departments here. The committee lays out the program for each man entering the institution, with the idea of teaching him the trade for which he is best suited.

"There are no favored men here; all are treated alike. They work a 50-hour week and all have the same privileges.

"There are two types of prisoners sent here—the men with short terms of one to two years, and the long-term prisoners who have qualified by their behavior in the penitentiary to come to the farm here to complete their terms. These long-term prisoners have completed at least half of their sentence in the penitentiary before their arrival."

The work of making new men of them starts as soon as they arrive. If possible, jobs and supervision are obtained for them by the time they are ready to leave. A youth who soon is to complete a ten-year sentence for armed robbery will have awaiting him a position on a newspaper. Superintendent Kearns is a firm believer in supervision for at least a year after his men are returned to society.

Then there is Arthur L. Towson, jr., farm superintendent. He was a former football star at Cornell University and was brought up on a farm. Besides teaching scores of the inmates farming, he also has entire supervision of the production of the farm.

Robert McGill is athletic director and also in charge of the education of the inmates. He coaches the farm's baseball team that has defeated almost every semi-pro team played in western Maryland. There are plenty of other recreations, including boxing, amateur shows and motion pictures. Three nights each week are devoted to school for improving the education of the inmates, and there are regular Sunday church services.

Virtually everything that is served on the tables for the inmates is raised on the farm. Each man also gets a pint of milk a day from the farm's splendid dairy.

Elaborate Production Report.

Let us look at the production report of Superintendent Towson for the season that has just closed: 7,500 bushels of potatoes, 1,250 bushels of wheat, 2,100 bushels of barley, 2,500 barrels of corn, 150 tons of silage, 3,500 bushels of string beans, 200 tons of hay, 287 dozens of eggs, 1,225 pounds of poultry, 179,660 pounds of milk, 2,326 pounds of butter, 40 tons of cabbage, 400 bushels of onions, 750 bushels of turnips, 250 bushels of beets, 300 bushels of carrots and 250 bushels of parsnips. Fresh butter made on the farm is served at the meals. It costs but 20 cents a day to feed a man, and the food that is served to the men also is to be found on the tables of members of the staff. And this cost of 20 cents a day to feed a man is also giving the farm credit for what it produces. The farm manager sells to the commissary department, getting wholesale prices for what he produces. What is not used during the producing season is canned. The cannery put up 3,000 gallons of beans, corn and other vegetables which will be used during the winter. There were 150 heads of hogs butchered this fall.

When the establishing of a prison farm was first discussed, it was decided that it would be erected somewhere in western Maryland, and the people in this section were bitterly opposed to the project. Frederick County was first considered and options obtained on some farms, but influential citizens put up such a howl that the Welfare Board decided to look elsewhere. They next began a search in Washington County, and again a flood of protests went into the governor and the Welfare Board.

When it was learned that options had been obtained at Roxbury, a protest meeting was called at the Lappans Parish house. Much of this opposition, however, soon disappeared when members of the board appeared and explained that there would be no bars or guards and that only the better behaved prisoners would be sent there. The community, despite the fact that the protest was withdrawn, still were skeptical.

Nearby Farmers Favor Farm.

Now, two years afterward, the prison farm is looked upon by the farmers of the neighborhood with a feeling of pride. It is a welcome addition to the community life. They look upon the farm as a real neighbor. Recently, when one of the barns on a nearby farm caught fire about midnight, a delegation of 25 inmates at the prison farm turned out and helped save the building. Farmers drop into the prison farm's recreational building in the evening for the boxing and movie shows.

The inmates are living in temporary buildings for the present. The permanent group of buildings will not be completed until about 1942.

The first of these units of permanent buildings, a group of farm buildings made from native limestone, erected by the inmates under skilled supervision, are now nearing completion and are models which are opening the eyes of those who have come to see them.

A splendid herd of milk cows already has been started. A group of penal farm's cows were entered at the recent Hagerstown Fair and carried off several first prizes in competition with some of the finest herds in western Maryland and adjacent States. They were under the personal supervision of inmates while quartered at the fair grounds and their custodians were there without guards.

Farm's Influence Favorable.

Already the influence of the penal farm is being felt back at the penitentiary and house of correction. There has been a noticeable improvement in the conduct of prisoners at both institutions. There are few who are incarcerated at these institutions but who look forward to the day when they, too, have qualified to be transferred to the Roxbury farm.

No judge can commit a prisoner directly to the prison farm. Its population is hand-picked by officials of the State's prison system.

Men are being turned out of the Roxbury School, says Superintendent Kearns, in splendid condition. They are not physical wrecks, with their minds warped, such as many who leave the Nation's penal institutions. They are social assets.

Strangest Flora of Globe in Botanic Gardens

Far-Off Countries Yield Exotic Plants to Thrill Visitors at New Conservatory; Growth of Sudan Grass "Heard" on Wet Nights.

By Don Bloch.

ALL the strange corners of the earth have sent their flora to Washington through the years, to make its Botanic Gardens one of the authentic thrills of the Capital. Each of the five senses—even, it is claimed, on moist nights, one may actually hear grow certain tall, rank Sudan grasses—is to be esthetically banqueted in a tour of the New Conservatory, recently erected according to the most modern horticultural hall improvements designed by the third Director of the Botanic Garden, Dr. George W. Hess, here since 1912.

The old Main Conservatory, now in sad, white-washed dilapidation, with "Danger" signs conspicuous all around it, is to be dismantled when the job of complete transplanting is finished. Many rare plants are still housed beneath its crumbling dome, however, and for some time still, according to officials, the ancient, rust-eaten weathervane, dated 1687, will top its steel and glass frame. Except for occasional scurryings and rustlings in the deep grass and weeds around—rats, squirrels, old resident reptiles, perhaps—that building is now silent.

Turn now to the grounds surrounding the old conservatory. There some half-dozen greenhouses will be preserved for culture and propagation of new plants before removal into the Main Conservatory. On the way across Maryland avenue to the new building, one notes the pair of Bald Cypresses planted by Booth and Forrest, famous American actors of an elder day.

High Temperatures Attained.

First novelty to meet the eye in the new building, constructed of white Indiana limestone, almost a block square, and framed inside with 87 tons of aluminum girders, is the glass, partitioning off the different divisions of the exhibit. Great frames carry the weight of huge sections of plate glass, thus permitting variant temperatures within the one area. Certain tropical plants need a high degree of heat, and attendants say as much as 132 degrees has been noted on the automatic recorders placed in every room. All the shutters controlling ventilation throughout are electrically operated by thermostatic controls and need no operator.

To right and left flow fresh water through lily pools, containing that marine plant in every variety and shade from deepest white to an almost black flower. Through concealed pipes the water flows from these down a miniature cascade beneath a glass partition into another large room housing taller plants and trees.

An as yet chaotic profusion of trees, shrubs, marine, terrestrial, and epiphyte flowers are to be found in the dozen large wings of the conservatory. One wing houses an incomplete collection of over a hundred varieties of cacti—ball shaped, spiny, variegated from dull gray to brilliant blue, spiny and succulent, silky, cacti shapped like a hand and fingers, shaped like shoe-strings yet growing to a height of 10 feet! shaped like a thorn tree and sharper pointed; cacti small as a 10-cent piece, and others towering up 30 feet with a girth of 4 feet at the base. In another wing are what ferns have been transplanted, delicate, lacy, and coarse and gigantic, fine as spider-web, modest, raw and spiny, star and hand-shaped.

Riches From Faraway Lands.

Two rooms, a large center one and the northwest wing, as yet unclassified, present a potpourri of colors and odors. A a conifer, from Liberia, shaped like a cross, low, stunted-appearing; a Bird of Paradise tree from Africa; an oddity in glassy green from Madagascar; from American tropics, bananas, oranges, breadfruit and coffee trees; mangoe trees from the West Indies and blooming, smooth-barked allspice; Australian thorn trees and chestnuts; Chinese prehistoric Ginkgo nut and leechee and ratton palms with bare trunks and tufted top knots; tough rubber plants from South America; Egyptian paiuccas, from which papyrus was made dusty centuries ago; a Hottentot poison plant which pygmies use to tip their arrows with—all these and hundreds more add delight to interest in this place of rare horticultural miscellanea.

Of intense interest to the few is the collection of orchids and other rare plants to be transferred to the new building, as soon as proper housing conditions can be arranged. This collection is now being cared for in two of the propagation greenhouses by Wilmer J. Paget, assistant director of the Botanic Garden, who, for 40 years, has made these exotic plants his chief care. Paget's knowledge of orchids and the rarer blooms extends to an almost human sympathy with them, and he knows, unerringly, the most intimate history of each of the several hundred plants entrusted to his care.

The humanlike quality of the orchid especially is illustrated by the fact that, like individuals in the species homo, no two are exactly identical. Their nurture requires a patience unusual; some orchids need anywhere from 9 to 20 years of growth for determination of their exact type and rarity. A price of $10,000 is not unique to pay for an especially rare hybrid, Paget declared.

Strange and Beautiful Types.

Technicalities are out of place herein; therefore, the lay recorder has resort only to ordinary words to describe the startling beauties revealed.

There are Caladiums, whose swollen, hairy stalks carry enormous leaves, heart-shaped. While keeping a general look of kinship, they are every one different. Some are rosy-red—the Virginale, which seems cut out in glazed cloth or court plaster; the Albane, all white, which looks as if made of a semitransparent film; Mme. Mame, which mimics zinc, blotched with drops of oil paint, red lead and ceruse; the Bosphorus, like starched calico, spotted with crimson and myrtle green; the Aurora Borealis, with broad leaves the color of raw meat striated with darker red and purplish threads, and swollen, sweaty.

There is Alocasio Metallica, with leaves overlaid with a layer of green bronze, shot with gleams of silver. The Anthurium, of the arum family, of Columbia, with lozenge-shaped leaves, bottle green in hue, from which shoots a switch on top of which appears a great ace of hearts—and from the middle of this springs a fleshy tail, downy, white and yellow, corkscrewed above the heart.

Death Dared To Find Orchids.

Motor for First Plane Cast In Old Iron Works Here

—they carry on Washington's pioneer foundry business, started 81 years ago.

Foundry Linked to Air Dreams of Langley Still Flourishes.

AVIATION'S history attempts, but does not always succeed, to record for posterity the names of all those men who were in some way connected with epics of the air. The name of one, George A. White, of Washington, must be entered in that book of history for all time as one who contributed his small part that men might fly.

One of the men, an old man then, who stood on the bank of the Potomac that day of October 8, 1903, watching to see if this strange contraption would fly on its second launching—one of the men who watched was proud. He was Mr. White, founder of George White & Co., Washington iron works. He is now dead.

He was proud because he alone knew that the most vital part of that aeroplane, crazy or not, whether it flew or not, the motor, had been molded and cast in his foundry. He knew he had helped to make history.

There were other foundries in Washington —Fred Schneider, sr., for instance, had one. Then there was the Foxall Works, founded by Henry Foxall (who had been a partner of Robert Morris in the latter's Eagle Iron Works, in Philadelphia) away back in December, 1800. That had been the "first foundry south of Philadelphia," the first one in Washington, later to become the Columbian Foundry. There were other foundries, older and perhaps bigger. . . . But they had chosen White's shop.

Family Continues Business.

And that shop, established in its present location on Maine avenue southwest, back in 1852, was therefore half a century and more old when S. N. Langley, then director of the Smithsonian Institution as well as pioneer aviation experimentalist, made use of it.

Stanley, son of Fred J. White, and George A. White, jr., brother of Fred, are the members of the second and third generations of this English family, who today, 81 years after the founding, still carry on the business of the general iron works, with "foundry, core-house, blacksmith and machine shop, and boiler room," as the old directories describe it.

But for the general change in foundry work, caused by improved uses of cement and extensive use of steel instead of cast-iron, the whole setup of the shop is exactly the same as it was the day it was built. The equipment, in many instances, has been repaired rather than replaced, because the older materials were found better suited to the shop's use. Changes in personnel, even, have been few through the years.

"Our oldest employes," said George White, jr., "if they hadn't died, would still be with us. Some were here, up to a few years ago, who had worked with all three generations of us. One, a molder, just two years ago, celebrated his sixtieth year in the shop.

"We carry on in the same lines of work exactly as my father used to—ornamental iron work, fences, doorway portals (although, of course, there are few calls for those since the '90s), fancy grillwork, manhole frames and covers for the District."

Shot Made for Cannons.

"We made a cast-iron stove, too; and the "White Plough," for which my father patented the famous mold-board. We made solid shot for the cannons in the '60's—but those you won't find here any more, no, sir."

Suspended between an ancient, fire-blackened beam in the second floor of the pouring room, and an equally ancient and huge beam buried in the foot-thick packing silt in the floor, is the original crane used for lifting the ladles of molten iron to pour into the larger castings. It has been in continuous use for 81 years.

"I only wish I had a mill for every pound of iron she's carried," said Stanley White. "I'd be a rich man and then some. She lifted all the cast-iron floor-plates in the Library of Congress, for instance, because we had the job of casting them in 1897."

OFFICE
WHITE'S IRON WORKS

The cupola for melting the iron has been replaced but once and that, because the original was too small, many years ago. A chipped and cracked square-shaped iron bathtub squats smugly in the mold silt which covers the floor in the rear of the molding room. The tub is filled with water for tempering the sand. Two splintered four-by-sixteens, held together by steel strips two inches wide, are supported by ornate thick, wrought-iron legs; this, now used as a catch-all table, however, was but lately a foot-powered lathe for finishing the castings.

Museum of Antiquities.

The second floor is a museum of antiquities—forgotten molds, patterns and castings. Here is one of the steel disks from a Hancock plow, first to use the steel disk 35 years ago. Dust-laden cams and gears, sewer lids, bridge models, wheels, and grill work—wood and iron—litter the floors, walls and hanging shelves. Here is the limbo of dreams; forgotten inventions lie gathering oblivion.

No building in Washington since 1852 but has tales within its walls, and Fred and George White can remember a few—of the time when the second floor of the foundry room (now torn out to make height for the cupola) was a Civil War era dance hall; when, in the midst of festivities there, a carousing soldier was killed.

In the last days of August, 1862, after the second battle of Bull Run, the Union soldiers had bivouacked in the space across the street from the foundry, then an open part of the Mall. Marching in, the men were given the order to "unload guns." They pointed them toward the foundry, and the next morning George White, sr., couldn't find a whole pane of glass in his shop!

Expansion Progress Reported By International Art Forum

During the last two months Mme. Amelia Conti, president of the International Art Forum, has been crossing the country to extend the Forum outside Washington and has reported formation of interested groups in St. Louis, Hot Springs, New Orleans, Houston, San Antonio, Tucson, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles.

Mme. Conti has been successful in arousing the interest of the Italian consuls in St. Louis, New Orleans and Los Angeles; the Mexican consuls in Tucson and Los Angeles; Dr. Homer LeRoy Shantz, president of the University of Arizona; Jose Mojica, outstanding Latin-American screen star and operatic tenor; John C. Henderson, supervisor of recreation of Los Angeles; Mrs. Emma Marchetti, president of the Eleonora Duse Club, of Los Angeles, and Bert Rovere, proprietor of the famous Paris Inn, and others.

Etiquette Book of 1827 Shows Manners Rise With Generations.

"A YOUNG woman sitting next to a gentleman at a table should never lift her eyes above the lapel of his coat, lest by looking directly into his eyes she appear bold" is one of the 25 pointed suggestions in the "Table Ettiquette" section of "The Ladies' Indispensable Assistant," published in 1827 and recently unearthed in Washington. Another valuable hint states that "If possible the knife should never be put into the mouth at all, and if at all, let the edge be turned outward for safety's sake."

This must have been a popular volume around the Capital, for the preface states it was written for the women of Washington, "where the art of entertaining (as well as being entertained) should receive its highest development, since this city already has a reputation for gracious hospitality."

Each of the 25 suggestions is a far cry from modern rules of etiquette. Indeed, as one reads the sentence, "Let men guests be versed in conversation and women pleasant but not coquettish," one wonders if that was as difficult in 1827 as it would be today. At the conclusion of the chapter, however, the author sounds a note of comfort in stating that "If all rules are forgotten, the guest will not go far astray who retains a regard for others, and the hostess may be confident of the success of her dinner, provided she has the manner of hospitality and observes the rule of simplicity in the choice of food, such as is recommended elsewhere in this volume."

Drawings from Edward Lear.

Ideas of Simplicity.

Apparently, however, this author had an idea of simplicity that in no way coincides with the prevailing one, for the hints for "simple family meals to which, perhaps, a few friends have been invited," include ten different menus of from six to eight courses each. And the shortest of all of these lists squirrel soup, fresh codfish, boiled ham, roast turkey and cranberry sauce, fowls stewed whole, oyster pie, smoked tongue, fried sweet potatoes, boiled tomatoes, buttered peas, squash, coconut pudding, chocolate layer cake, mince pie, beaten biscuits, calves feet jelly, prune juice with milk (or currant wine) and drip coffee.

It can not be denied that this unidentified author has succeeded in his (or her) desire "to give variety to meals, while gratifying the palate." But a glance at that menu (which is not even classed under suggestions for state affairs) is enough to warrant the belief that profusion of food was not limited to Roman households. Simplicity? Shades of Nero and his guests dining on brains of peacocks and tongues of nightingales! One can not help regretting that this quaint book fails to give the author's notion of a truly elaborate meal.

The menus for special dinners offer even more variety. Each one contains at least 16 different dishes, and one includes 29. Directions are given for preparing choice dishes favored by statesmen from the time of George Washington through the administration of John Quincy Adams, and a number of Dolly Madison's famous "receipts"

Alien Wife Finds U. S. Forbidden Land

Red Tape of Cabel Passport Law Creates "Woman Without Country."

The following article, written by a widely known newspaper correspondent, describes some of the whimsical as well as serious consequences of the varied effects of the Cabel law upon international marriages.

IN 1926 I married abroad.

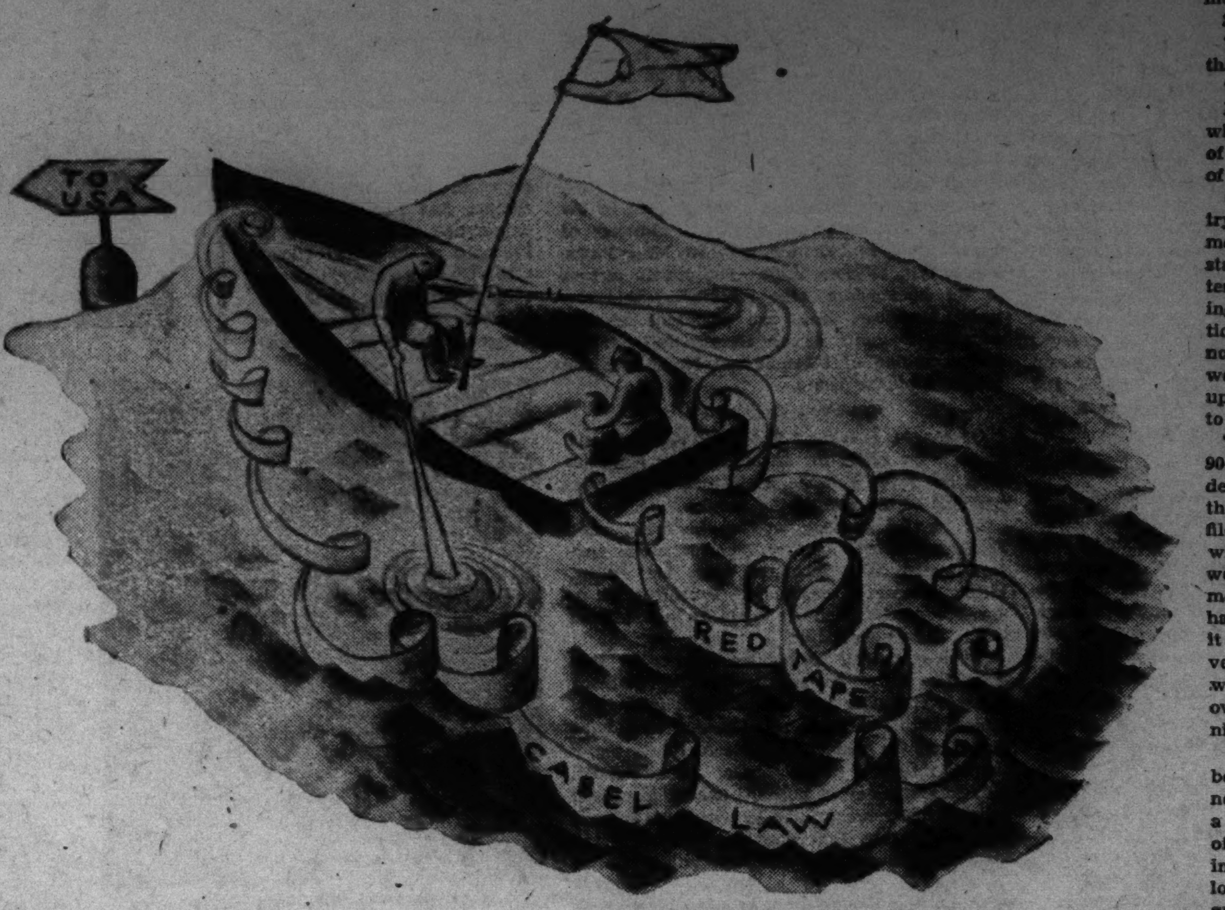
The preliminaries were tremendous.

Among other things I had to produce a statement from an American consul general that my wife would be permitted to enter the United States.

"You understand," the foreign civil official told me, "Your wife does not become an American citizen, and we want to be sure, in the event that you should die or desert her, that she will not become a public charge."

That was my first direct contact with the Cabel law. As a newspaper correspondent, I had brushed elbows with it. I knew that some American ladies had secured the passage of a law which resulted in the anomalies of American women marrying in certain countries having two nationalities and two passports and of American men marrying in certain countries finding their wives without any nationality or any passport.

I knew that the law had all Europe laughing openly at the United States. Europe laughed principally because some of the sponsors of the law were women who had had their fortunes attached because they were married to aliens. She laughed also because the law worked more to the disadvantage of American men than to the advantage of American women. For every American woman who acquires a foreign husband there are several American men who acquire foreign wives.



I jumped the first hurdle presented by the Cabel law, and married. My wife already was very pro-American. From the movies she had a certain distorted idea of America. I was able to help her straighten her vision to some extent without any great loss of glamour.

The advent of a baby increased her American sentiments. He was properly registered as a citizen the day of his birth, and I hid from my wife the fact that he could never aspire to the Presidency. If she had felt before that naturalization was a natural sequence to our marriage, she now felt that it was a duty. Her son was an American citizen, and it was her privilege to make him a good American citizen.

Getting Used to America.

A year later we came to America. There was a moment of shock, of disillusion, of homesickness. It wasn't so much what she found here as what she didn't. She missed both the social friends and the social institutions about which her life had been built.

For those Americans who have never traveled abroad it might be well to state that America does not lend itself to sightseeing except in a big way—Niagara Falls, the Rocky Mountains, Yellowstone Park, the Grand Canyon. Quaintness, mellowness, historical attachment and light pastimes are all missing here. Europe lends itself to idleness. America is built for activity.

I have seen lots of American women abroad who were worse sports than my wife was during her first few months in America. She suffered, but she gritted her teeth. She learned English. She played bridge, which she previously had abhorred. She learned to cook. She taught her new friends fine needle work. And gradually she began to get her feet firmly planted on American soil.

"When will I become an American citizen?" she started to ask.

"After a year's residence," I told her.

She opened her eyes wide.

"Then I am like any immigrant?" she asked.

"Immigrants have to be here five years, and you have to be here only one year," I told her.

"And if we have to leave before the year is up?" she demanded.

I assured her that we wouldn't. But we did. Nine months after our arrival we sailed again for Europe. She had her maiden passport renewed, and we traveled, two nationalities in the same cabin. We traveled and lived in three countries during the next two years, and we never crossed a frontier or registered with foreign police that we didn't have to make explanations.

"Madame is my wife, but we have funny laws in America and madame is not yet an American citizen."

Sometimes Madame and I quarreled. It was about the weather, or a dress, or guests, or the color of the baby's eyes, and Madame acquired an underhanded trick of thrusting upward with a barbed dart.

"After all, we are of different nationalities. How can we expect to understand each other?" she would demand.

It wasn't a point I could argue with her. It was the only American law with which she had come into contact. To her it was the criterion of all American laws. It was stupid, and all I could do was to take flight.

Issue of Broad-mindedness

The broad-minded American women who made the Cabel law will argue that my wife should have been more broad-minded. I am glad that she wasn't. I liked her better as a woman.

The time arrived for returning to America.

"Get me a nonquota visa and we will try again," she told me.

We had photos taken, dug up marriage certificates, birth certificates, certificates of domicile, swore to affidavits, signed papers, and sailed. We arrived. All American passengers were passed first. We arrived en famille before the inspectors. One date was missing from one space on one paper—a consular officer's oversight.

The date appeared at other places on the same page.

Lese majeste, red tape, pate de foie gras and tripe!

"Your wife's papers are not in order."

"If that date is all that is worrying you," I said, "I will fill it in myself."

I took the paper, and only the absence of a firing squad saved me from execution.

"Blah, blah, blah," the inspector started, and ended up by putting us at the end of the line.

A woman's silence is ominous, and my wife was silent.

"It looks like Ellis Island," the inspector said.

I threatened to call up Washington. It didn't move it, but it gave him an idea.

"I will call up my chief in New Jersey," he said.

He called, then turned to me with a smile.

"You're getting all the breaks today," he informed me. "He said it was all right."

That bit of red tape and stupidity cost me plenty. I had to carry my wife's immigrant identification card in my inside vest pocket for the next fortnight to keep her from burning it.

Our stay in America started badly and naturalization was a taboo subject.

Four months later we sailed again, suddenly. I applied for a re-entry permit for my wife, but discovered that it took several days to secure it. We sailed without it.

Eight months later we returned.

"Don't bother about the non-quota visa," my wife told me.

But I obtained a new one, telling her that it was the only sure way of keeping her in the country.

Three months later we sailed again, and two months later we were returning.

There was another nonquota visa, more red tape, and more hurt feelings.

Baby Becomes "Amurricun."

This time we settled down a bit more permanently, Month after month passed. The past for forgiven and forgotten. The baby was now 6 years old, and an Amurricun.

When he was not cutting pages from first editions he was cutting pictures of President Roosevelt from rotogravure supplements and pasting them to the walls. He had stopped calling him the Pras-ee-dant and the Pras-ee-dant-ee, and was calling him "the Presidunt."

Then came an order to sail for Europe within a week.

I asked my wife for the passports. They needed new visas.

"But I will have a new passport—an American one," she said.

"The next time," I countered. "We've been here only eleven months.

She was silent.

"I'll see if I can do something," I offered

"Please don't," she said.

But I did try. And I met with courtesy that is out of place in the discussion of the Cabel law.

Officials were willing to try and wrangle the extra month from our previous stays and our obvious intentions. They were willing to let her file a petition. But they could give no assurance that the court would accept the petition upon our eventual return to America.

The law provides for a 90-days' continuous residence after the filing of the petition. If it were filed and we returned within a year maybe it would save for us the months of residence that had accumulated. Maybe it wouldn't. There was a very good likelihood that we would have to start over again from the beginning.

My wife and I have been married eight years now. We have built up a community of interests, of tastes, of understandings and loyalties. Despite lots of handicaps, it is a quite happy marriage.

By the laws of averages and by lots of precedents it should remain happy.

The fact that my wife is a foreigner doesn't make so much difference. Lafacadio Hearn wept because at the end of 14 years he didn't understand his Japanese wife. Many American men have cursed because at the end of 14 days they have understood all about their wives. The charm of the unexpected in marriage counterbalances its monotonies.

What does make a difference is the fact that my wife feels that she is a foreigner. She now feels that she has no place in my country. The next step is for her to feel that she doesn't care a hang. Then her loyalty to the ideal will become undermined. Finally she will have prejudices which otherwise she would not have permitted to grow. Maybe, one day, when we are discussing our son's food we will have a quarrel that will take on international aspects, and the whole League of Nations won't be able to patch up the differences.

Neutrality Found Safe.

For some time past I have followed the policy of never expressing an opinion regarding her country. There is nothing very complimentary I could say about it.

On the other hand, she has brought up the subject frequently of late, and I have had to follow a strict principle of neutrality.

This is the moral side of my experience with a stupid law. It is always in the back of my mind.

There is another side. It doesn't bother me often, but it does give me a severe pain at times.

I have to travel a lot. Travel means visas. Visas cost money.

During the last eight years I have had 26 visas on my passport. They haven't worried me because my employers have paid for them. But each time I have had a visa I have had to get one for my wife. And in addition I have had to get her four American visas.

Moreover, we haven't had the advantage

Daughters, Following in Footsteps of Famou

Pocahontas Led the Way—Today Tendency of Women to Inherit Ability or Genius From Paternal Parent Is Marked.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

IT'S "My Daughter" nowadays in the Hall of Fame.

At last women are having their day in the sacred precincts where humanity treasures those who stand out from the crowd for some achievement, genius or ability beyond their fellows. On all sides it is apparent that the genius of the father, too, often descends to the daughter of the house in this age of freedom of woman.

President Roosevelt recognized the new theory of hereditary ability passing from father to daughter when he appointed Mrs. Charles C. Rumsey—Mary Harrimann Rumsey—national chairman of the Consumers' Advisory Board of the NRA. From E. H. Harriman, one of the industrial giants of his day, has descended to his daughter his talent for organization, wide understanding of economic issues and the desire to achieve something out of the ordinary.

There is much about Mrs. Rumsey that reminds many people of her dynamic father. She has the same quiet appraisal of persons and issues and loves to tackle a problem and solve it. Always she has been fond of the unusual and her enthusiasms have been many.

Organized Junior League.

The Junior League of America, an organization of young society women, admission to which is a passport to the elite, is due to her genius. Some years ago she realized that debutantes and post-debutantes must have other aims in life besides dances and parties. So she organized and founded the Junior League to interest them in social service and similar work. Now the Junior League has been organized in many American cities and has even spread to other countries as well. And it is all due, primarily, to Mrs. Rumsey, who has the habit of crystallizing her enthusiasms into action.

Upon her appointment as national chairman of the Cousumers' Advisory Board of the NRA Mrs. Rumsey put all her organizing ability to work to bring consumers into step with the purposes of national recovery. There were a thousand and one vexing questions to answer, much statistical matter and dry as dust economic data to assimilate, but Mrs. Rumsey, just as her father would have done, got down to work with the result that consumers' part is one of the best arranged and most efficient elements of the NRA program.

Nor is Mrs. Rumsey the only daughter of a great financial wizard who has inherited her father's zest for organization, interest in business matters and the power of dealing with national issues.

Inherited Ability.

That giant of finance, J. Pierpont Morgan, sr., left behind him not only a logical successor in the present J. Pierpont Morgan as head of the House of Morgan, but a daughter, Miss Anne Morgan, who has achieved fame on her own account and is one of the leading women among Americans today.

After the World War Miss Morgan showed her executive ability in organizing the reconstruction of many towns and villages in war desolated France. During the conflict itself she was foremost in relief work and had much to do with the organization of women in this country for the tasks that befell them in that strenuous period.

MISS MABEL BOARDMAN.

Like Mrs. Rumsey, Miss Morgan cherishes the traditions established by her father.

Another financial king's daughter who is remembered for her own achievements as well is Mrs. Finley J. Shepard, formerly Miss Helen Gould, daughter of Jay Gould. It is due to Mrs. Shepard that there has been an advance in Navy relief work and she also has taken a leading part in national defense movements and has lectured and spoken widely on this subject before women's organizations and clubs.

Still another example of a woman inheriting the financial genius of a father is seen in the Countess Szechenyi, wife of the Minister of Hungary to Great Britain, who was Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, of New York. The sturdy virtues of the commodore, who established this historic American line, are apparent in the countess in many directions, especially in her understanding of international issues and the progress of the times.

Roosevelt Case Cited.

Of course, President Roosevelt did not have to look far afield for an outstanding daughter who has made a name for herself quite independent of the rest of the family.

At his side stands a woman—his wife, Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, author, lecturer, social welfare leader who inherited from her father, Elliott Roosevelt, brother of President Theodore Roosevelt, much of the ability he exhibited in his rather short life.

Science as well as history teaches us that daughters very frequently inherit dominant traits of character and temperament from their fathers, while there is equal reason to believe that often the maternal line contributes many character aspects to the sons of her household.

In this new day of political achievement and political acumen exhibited by women, it is more than noticeable that daughters are wearing their father's political mantles with a fitness that is reconstructing government and national life generally.

MRS. ELLEN SPENCER MUSSEY.

Take for instance this trio of women, daughters of men whose names live in American history. Unquestionably, Alice Roosevelt Longworth, Ruth Hanna Simms and Genevieve Champ Clark Thomson are among the best informed women on national politics living today. It is not strange, for, to all three of these women the art of politics is as fascinating and as natural as breathing itself. They are learned in its lore and to them the moves on the political chess board are far more exciting than mere social pastimes. In them one sees again President Theodore Roosevelt, with his grasp of statecraft; Mark Hanna, a master of political strategy, and Champ Clark with his magnificent store of political facts at his finger tips.

For this trio no theater can compare with interest with the drama they see spread before them as they gaze down from Senate or House galleries upon the embattled statesmen below.

But gazing does not content these women. They talk over issues with the leaders on both sides of a question, they read avidly all that is written on political matters and they put in good hard hours of study, just as their fathers did, when they want to arrive at the inner meanings of the prevailing issue of the moment.

One of this trio, former Representative Ruth Hanna Simms, has had the actual experience of a legislator in the halls of Congress. Genevieve Champ Clark Thomson came near to the same distinction when she ran for Congress in New Orleans some years ago. Even in that conventional town, hide-bound with its inhibitions against women taking any part in public life, Genevieve come within some 1,500 votes of victory. It was an open secret that Mrs. Nicholas Longworth could have succeeded to her husband's seat in the House of Representatives when the Speaker died several years ago. But she declined the offer most promptly and preferred to remain a spectator of history in the making from the congressional galleries.

MRS. GENEVIEVE C. CLARK THOMSON.

In her recent book, "Crowded Hours," Mrs. Longworth modestly discounts the popular opinion that she is a power in American politics. She wrote: "There is an odd legend that I am a power in politics, that I influence votes on legislation—a curious and absurd legend totally without foundation in fact. The truth is that I have never in any single instance influenced a vote, and I and those who know me frequently wonder with considerable amusement how such a legend has come into being—how the reputation for having 'power' and 'influence' has fastened on me."

Public Doesn't Agree.

It would be hard for Mrs. Longworth to find much agreement along this line in Washington.

Genevieve Champ Clark Thomson was born into one of America's royal political families, as it were. The Clark meal hours, like those at the Theodore Roosevelt breakfast table, were distinguished for their political discussions among the members of the family. Genevieve knew all the differences in political faith of the two major parties long before she did the art of long and short division. She made her debut on the floor of the House when only six weeks old, her father carrying her proudly, all wrapped up in a blanket, for his colleagues to gaze upon.

As a child the House was her playground and men, notable in affairs of state, were her playmates and friends. Mrs. Thomson learned the practical side of politics there, too, as her brother, United States Senator Bennett Champ Clark, will be glad to attest. It was her yeoman service in the spring and summer of 1932 which made this promising young Missourian roll up a majority of nearly a half million votes in the November elections.

A little daughter, Ruth, was at the side of Mark Hanna when he was a dominant figure in Republican politics. Politics was a family theme with the Hannas, too. Although Mrs. Simms had a brother, it was the decree of fate that she should carry on the "Hanna tradition" in American politics.

The citizens of Illinois, recognizing her fine mind, her humanitarian spirit and her political integrity, sent her to represent them in Congress for some years. There she made her mark. With the Democratic tidal waves of the immediate past, Representative Ruth Hanna McCormick—she had not remarried and become the wife of former Representative Albert G. Simms at that time—was swept out of her congressional office. Her friends, and they are legion in national life, regard her as an outstanding figure in American public service. They predict that she will be found again on the firing line of political life.

A Daughter of Connecticut.

Another statesman's daughter, high in the councils of the National Woman's Party, who has carved her name alongside that of her father's in American politics, is Elsie Hill, daughter of the late Representative Ebenezer B. Hill, of Connecticut.

That political science is becoming one of the favorite studies of womankind is demonstrated by the growing demand of women for political office. Not only in Washington, but throughout the country as well, women are holding posts hithertofore the rewards of masculine activities in the realm of government, local, State and national. Politics for generations, it has been frequently pointed out, has been regarded more or less of a man affair and interest. Until the suffrage years dawned upon the country, men considered it their prerogative to argue, fight over and divide the spoils of the great political machines set up in this land. For women, in the old days, this was a mysterious and forbidden territory.

Suffrage changed all that and women discovered that marking a ballot once a year was not such a terrific task, after all, and not to be compared in effort to that of obtaining all one's political representation through persons for whom you were not permitted to vote.

Feminine Representation.

With suffrage came a unique happening in the House of Representatives. For the first time in political history a woman, Representative Winifred Mason Huck, daughter of the late Representative William Mason, of Illinois, occupied the seat there formerly occupied by her father. Mrs. Huck had been familiar with political life since her earliest girlhood, having passed many years here with her parents. Always interested in the workings of government, she found her task in Washington an easy one and made a creditable record during her one term here.

A leader in patriotic endeavors and serving several times as president of national organizations, Mrs. Mary Logan Tucker displays the executive talents and the ability to lead which were foremost in the career of her father, Maj. Gen. John A. Logan, the Black Eagle of the Civil War. Gen. Logan served several terms in the Senate from Illinois and his daughter, who resembles him greatly in appearance, it is said, has had a lifelong interest in political affairs and is prominent among Republican women in this city.

Daughter Was His Pride.

Glancing around Washington in search of other famous daughters of famous fathers one sees Mabel Boardman, secretary of the American Red Cross, one of the first women in public service today. The daughter of the late William J. Boardman, philanthropists, publicists and first citizens of Washington after coming here from Cleveland many years ago, intimate friends of Presidents and statesmen, Mr. Boardman found his chief pride in his declining years in the achievements of his daughter, Mabel. The executive ability and statesmanship Miss Mabel Boardman has exhibited as the directing genius of the American Red Cross in its reorganizing and expansion program is regarded also as an inheritance from her paternal great-grandfather, Senator Elijah Boardman, one of the giants in the Upper House of Congress in his day. Miss Boardman also was the first woman to be appointed a Commissioner of the District of Columbia. Although she is a stanch Republican, this honor was bestowed upon her by the Democratic Woodrow Wilson.

Visitors to the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor recently were met by the acting chief, Miss Katherine Lenroot, daughter of former Senator Irvine Lenroot, of Wisconsin. The senator was always very content to admit that his daughter was very like him and her friends say she has inherited his brilliant mind, quick grasp of technical subjects and has his skill in debating issues.

When Miss Lenroot came out of college when her father was in the United States Senate she enjoyed the pleasures of the other young girls of the senatorial circles, but she also spent some of her time in the pursuit of more serious matters. She was always interested in sociology, especially as it applies to the children of the Nation. Now Miss Lenroot is the assistant chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor and a world-wide authority on child problems.

A survey of "Who's Who" in Washington brings to light further examples of "like father, like daughter." There is Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, jr., whose husband is mentioned prominently as one who will be outstanding in the reorganization of the Republican party.

MRS. ALICE ROOSEVELT LONGWORTH.

Father Was Lincoln's Aid.

Mrs. Wadsworth was Alice Hay, daughter of Lincoln's secretary, afterward Secretary of State, author and diplomat. Mrs. Wadsworth was the prime mover in the organization of the American Woman's Legion, of which she was president, and in other civic movements as well. From her father she has received the gifts of literary creation and his skill in handling groups.

Sometimes the genius of the father is transmitted to the daughter in another form. The father may be distinguished for one type of achievement, the daughter manifests ability in still another direction. For instance, take the case of Mrs. Ellen Spencer Mussey, daughter of Platt R. Spencer, the man who originated one of the most widely known systems of handwriting, the Spencerian hand; from her childhood the daughter had a passion for the curing of human ills and especially those relating to women.

Nor has she ceased her activities along this line because she has now reached the octogenarian mark. Years ago when women were not admitted to law schools, Ellen Spencer Mussey not only battled until she got her own sheepskin, according to the tenets of Blackstone, but she did not rest until she had established the Washington School of Law, where other women might achieve as she had. With characteristic fairness men were included among the classes at the Washington School of Law. She wanted no favored class, men or women, in this country, all that she ever has asked has been that they might have equal opportunity for service in this land of freedom.

Talent Turned Toward Music.

Mark Twain lives in literature as one of the American immortals. His daughter, Clara Clemens, won fame, too, but as a singer. Literature did not have the abiding charm for her she found in music. When she married Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the noted pianist and composer, she found encouragement in the pursuit of the fine arts. Later she appeared on the stage in drama, playing the role of Joan of Arc on one occasion.

The late Senator Dwight W. Morrow was regarded as one of the political and financial leaders of his day. His daughter, Anne, wife of Col. Lindbergh, while still a schoolgirl, became known as one of the leading younger poets of the day. Her poems have not appeared since her marriage to the great aviator, but no doubt she is still writing and probably will be remembered as much for her poetry as for the distinction she won through birth and marriage.

Frank P. Noyes is the head of the A. P., but when literary folk think of "Noyes"—the American one—it is his daughter, Frances Noyes Hart, they remember. This young woman's novels are always in the best seller class and one of them, "The Bellamy Case," made a successful play.

Over at Bryn Mawr, the acting dean, Mrs. Frederick W. Manning, also has the distinction of calling a President "father." She was Miss Helen Taft, a White House debutante, but her father rejoiced more in her scholarship and clear brains. Mrs. Manning is one of the foremost women educators of the country.

In far away Denmark, when the American Minister appears in the drawing room of the king, the Danish people smile at her beauty and gracious presence. For another woman who has inherited her father's fame is Ruth Bryan Owen, daughter of the Great Commoner, hope of the Democracy in three campaigns and one time Secretary of State. As the United States Minister to Denmark, Mrs. Owen is the first woman to hold a major diplomatic post in the history of this country.

MISS ELSIE HILL.

Of course, it is not alone in America that it has been a case of "like father, like daughter."

One of the earliest examples of this in English history was that of Queen Elizabeth who, of all the children of Henry VIII, by any of his numerous wives, was the most brilliant and who inherited more of his real talents and capacity than either Queen Mary or poor little Edward VI, whose few years were enough to convince all that, as a ruler, he would have been a miserable failure had he been spared to have known more mature years.

In Elizabeth's case it was truly a matter of "like father, like daughter," although good Queen Bess was a vast improvement upon her parent in the way of morals.

Throughout history, famous daughters of famous father have appeared here and there on the skyline of achievement. For the most part, these appearances were regarded as accidental rather than as portraying a scientific fact of descent. The Franks got a glimpse of the possibility and acted promptly by establishing the Salic laws, which took away the right of reigning from the women of certain royal families. Once more men were protecting themselves from the feminine peril.

Of course, in this age when politics and political science have become an absorbing study of womankind, led by daughters of America's great, our women are willing to try their fate in almost every field of endeavor. But the first historical incident of the father-daughter tradition in this country was, of course, Pocahontas, the Indian princess known as the savior of Jamestown. Pocahontas was one of 16 daughters of the wily Indian king or emperor, Powhatan, who ruled undisputed over the vast domain of what is now known as the Old Dominion. None of the other daughters are remembered in history; Pocahontas alone shares with her father the distinction of inclusion in the white man's history books.

Ambitious But Tender-Hearted.

Powhatan was a wise man; he was a just ruler and Pocahontas inherited his sagacity and his outlook on life. He was determined to stamp out the feeble Jamestown colony. He rightly feared that it would mean the final annihilation of his race, and Pocahontas, tender-hearted and woman true, was just as determined that her white friends should have a chance of survival, at least.

It was her father's grit passed on to her that made her lead Indian bearers of corn and other food through the trackless woods to the starving whites on the little island where democracy first flourished in the New World.

Powhatan knew he had met his master in this daughter of his heart. He could recognize his own firmness in her attitude. At last he consented to her marriage to one of the white men, John Rolfe, perhaps hoping to get a little peace thereby. Anyway, the struggling colony of Jamestown was saved by the political wit of a forest maiden.

So, at the head of the roll of illustrious daughters of famous American men, we must place the name of Pocahontas. With his long feather quill, a Jamestown author quaintly described the Lady Pocahontas: "A little girl wrapped in a robe of doeskin, lined and edged with pigeon down, a white heron feather in her black hair, a forest maid truly, but royal every inch of her."

Jefferson's Daughter Next.

The next famous daughter of a famous father to stand out in American history is Martha Jefferson Randolph, daughter of Thomas Jefferson and his wife, Martha Skelton.

Martha Jefferson was but 11 years of age when she had to assume the role of comforter to her bereaved father. To Mrs. Jefferson had been denied knowledge of the honors that later in life were to crown the brow of her gifted husband. Hers was a strong, loving heart, a rare and refined intellect, cultivated by solid educational advantages, experience and the society of the greatest statesman and scholar of his day.

There is testimony on all sides that when

Publishing House Gossip and Talk of Authors

STEPHEN VINCENT BENET recently received another award for "John Brown's Body," which won the Pulitzer Prize in 1928. For "a distinguished contribution to American literature," he was given the Roosevelt Medal at a ceremony in the Roosevelt House, New York.

In 1911 appeared George Moore's "Ave," with the following passage: "Unless, indeed, genius awakens in one of the islanders off the coast where . . . only Irish is spoken. If such a one were to write a book about his island, he would rank above all living writers, and he would be known forevermore as the Irish Dante." With just such a background, Maurice O'Sullivan wrote "Twenty Years A-Growing," recently published by the Viking Press. Christopher Morley compared Mr. Sullivan with Homer, but no one as yet has come forward with the Dante simile.

"The most important magazine in America," in Edward J. O'Brien's words, announces a contest for short stories by college students. Story, at 20 East Fifty-seventh street, New York, will award a first prize of $100 and a second prize of $50 for the two best short stories of 1,500 to 6,000 words in length received up to April 15, 1934. Each entry must be certified by a faculty member, and no college or university may submit more than two entries. This last regulation is obviously a time-saver for the editorial staff, but one can scarcely believe that the run of college instructors in English will choose to forward the type of story which will interest Martha Foley and Whit Burnett, Story's editors.

Machine Age Menace.

"GLORY," by Francis Stuart. (Macmillan, $2.)

In a few years the machine age will have become so entrenched that nonconformists who threaten to disturb mechanized complacency will be put to death by great corporations clothed with disciplinary powers by the State.

That is the thought which Francis Stuart embraces in his new book, "Glory." He also believes youngsters, ambitious but without ideals, because there are none but machines to guide them, are headed for perdition.

The young Irish author weaves the theme into a fantastic yarn about an Irish girl, who, after tending chickens in the country, at 17 develops overnight into a corporation power; a crack pilot, who flies from Ireland to China, becomes the mistress of a Chinese war lord, causes a Russian prince to commit suicide, and ruins a war by slaying a general.

The book starts conventionally enough with Mairead O'Bryne and her father, Mike, living a routine life—the girl feeding chickens, the old man worrying about racing bets. It is not until the reader is far advanced that he learns he is looking upon another age, and that Mr. Stuart is worried about it.

Mairead and Mike become wealthy by selling part of their country land to a corporation which desires it for an airport in connection with a projected round-the-world aviation line.

Because of youthful charm and ability to drive a new Rolls Royce, Mairead is offered a position as an aviator in the corporation.

Instantaneously, then, she develops a lust for power, for glory. She wants to do big things, but alas, she lacks balancing ideals.

The country girl, riding her ambition without reins, finds she has a weird hold on General Porteous, a director in the corporation, flies him to London for a conference at which she excites men's passions, then flies him on to China in order to straighten out difficulties which had arisen over an eastern China aerodrome.

Here, for a while, her yearning for "life" forces the General to take a back seat temporarily because a war lord, Shang Ya, promises things she craves. He also recites poetry:

> "Alone I climb the road to the Eastern Rock.
> I lean my body on the banks of white stone
> I pull down with my hands a green casia branch.
> My mad singing startles the valleys and hills;
> The apes and birds all come to peep.
> Fearing to become a laughing-stock to the world;
> I choose a place that is unfrequented by men."

More thrills. More power. More glory. More people killed. Indeed, because the war lord—the jealous lover—blasts off General Porteous' hands, she shoots him off his horse. Then she hastens to her old friend, too late. He is dead.

An "outcast" now, "in a world that has become afraid of life and is trying to reduce its beauty and terror, passion and anguish to something comfortable and discreet," she returns to Ireland to face trial by the directors of the company for murder, espionage and disrupting a war. But it is all right, for, as Stuart says:

"This generation is full of outcasts searching for they don't know what. No hero, or conqueror or saint could lead them because they have lost belief in heroism and in sanctity. There has been too much wasted heroism and too much mock sanctity."

FRANCIS STUART.

In fact, one has the impression Mairead is glad to say good-by.

Without feeling, without pain, she faces the company's firing squad, smiling because, "there were some rabbits cropping the fine, thin grass that grew there. She smiled, thinking how in a moment they would scamper off startled."

Many people will no doubt be enraptured by the book because Mr. Stuart won renown with "Pigeon Irish" and "Sky." In fact, the New York Times calls him "a remarkable man—not to know his work is to neglect the most arresting novelist in many a year."—

MILDRED STEVENSON.

War and the Woman.

A narrative, "TESTAMENT OF YOUTH." By Vera Brittain. (Macmillan, $2.50)

For a man in the trenches, the daily slaughter grows either commonplace and is endured familiarly, or it forms a vast and unbelievable nightmare. For the woman at home, her world still lies in the same lineaments. But there are gaps, gigantic apertures, which cut the known and trusted into a crazy-quilt. Miss Brittain sits, "putting finishing touches on a pastel-blue crepe-de-chine blouse." The telephone rings. She takes down the receiver to hear that her lover, for whom she waits with a kind of snatched, indomitable gladness, died of wounds in a casualty clearing station three days before. One sees that the clock which ticks on the mantel is not the same clock—perhaps that is the true horror.

To just such horror Miss Brittain makes us tremble in this book. In all candor and passion, she writes of what she, a girl studying Greek at Oxford, a V. A. D. nurse at home, in Malta, and in France, saw and felt and met in the war. Her fiance was killed, her brother was killed, two of her dear friends were killed. She herself worked 20 hours at a stretch on surgical cases. She was in it almost from one end to the other. The war stood no farther away from her than a hand's breadth. And yet the ultimate horror was that clock ticking, that sense of the world she grew up in and found lovely not being the world at all but a departed dream.

Then with the war over, as puzzling as if a great, prolonged noise had stopped suddenly, she had to build herself over again. The lost feeling of the War Generation, fervent agitation for the League of Nations and for Feminism, her first literary work — these occupy her and lead her, with the end of the book, to marriage, to "this new beginning."

Strong and understandable as the last third of her story is in its efforts toward balance, toward a recovered station and poise in life, one must admit that it drags and drags and grows pale after the ringing accents of the war years. For in that first part of the narrative we are always moved and at times intolerably. Her truth is truth on its own feet, by its own coherent right. Yet some last imprint of conviction is added when we know that her narrative and her characters are actual. Her fiance, R. A. Leighton, was the older brother of Clare Leighton, the wood-cut artist. Winifred Holtby, her friend and companion after the war, is the author of "Mandoa, Mandoa!" on this same fall list of Macmillan's.

Miss Brittain was the author of "Verses of a V. A. D.," a little book of her war poetry still remembered. On such tokens of actuality "Testament of Youth" is based.

When novels with the glitter of arms and the stench of dug-outs have passed from our minds, we shall remember what one young woman recorded. For she has written, if I may be allowed a mild, bilingual pun on her name, the "feminine truth of England."

THEODORE HALL.

Hindus' Fourth Russian Book.

A study, "THE GREAT OFFENSIVE." By Maurice Hindus. (Smith & Haas, $3.)

The first instinct of every one who has been steeped in Soviet matters is to seek to determine the bias when confronted with a new book, article or, even, personality which touches on the U. S. S. R. Is the man a pro or an anti?

The outstanding merit of Maurice Hindus' fourth book on the Soviet Union is that it defies this almost automatic attempt to classify.

Hindus is a real journalist; he sees, and sees clearly, but he does not seek to prove a thesis. He has little or no love for figures and statistics. His effort is always directed toward discovering the underlying human factors—how people feel about a thing.

But he does not approach this task in a coldly intellectual way. He is himself warmly emotional and therefore peculiarly adapted to the task he has set for himself of portraying a nation's feelings.

One feels, I think, that he is a little uncomfortable in the first part of his latest book as he seeks to present a sort of balance sheet for the first Piatiletka, or Five-Year Plan.

When he gets down to describing what happens to the soul under Communism, how the Russian people are taking the gigantic experiments which are being performed on them, he is in his element. He writes with a vigor and an assurance which at once reveal his thorough understanding of Mother Russia.

Hindus is Russian-born, yet has spent most of his life in America. He is not nearly as interested in the theories of Marxian Socialism as he is in his former neighbors, immediate and otherwise, and what has and is happening to them.

MAURICE HINDUS.

He likes what he finds; he catches unerringly the intangible change that has come over the mass of Russians since the czar went away and Lenin came. This change is compounded of hope for the future, a new sense of usefulness, a feeling of individual importance, even if the new state does set itself up as more important than its component parts.

Nor does Hindus hesitate to speak out clearly when he finds that policies pursued by Moscow are going against the grain of the villages; it is always the villages that Hindus responds to most warmly.

The last part of "The Great Offensive" is devoted to a resume of the new Soviet attitude toward world revolution. This again is ground less instinctively satisfying to the Hindus "Weltanschauung."

It forms an effective but not startlingly new exposition of the fact that since the fall of Trotzky and the rise of Stalinism—with its clearly defined aim of creating socialism in one country and never mind the rest of the world—the ideal of world revolution has been reduced to lip service and nothing more.

This will perhaps prove comforting to those few remaining spirits who anticipate the direst possible things from Litvinoff's visit.

KENDALL FOSS.

One Magic Night.

A novel, "THE ENCHANTED VILLAGE." By Edward Shanks. (Bobbs-Merrill, $2.)

An odd assortment of Londoners went down to a little Sussex village, and from Saturday night to Sunday morning a spell was cast over them. The cold and staid woman of the world met young love, her inexperienced sister grew up, the domestic affairs of one family took a sudden turn, the business concerns of another came to a fantastic crisis. Something magical and potent floated in the night air over the mulberry tree, over the barn dance and the week-end party, transforming for a brief while the whole nature of these people and leaving a mark of enchantment upon them.

Mr. Shanks achieved a concentrated and compact drama, with perfect unity of time and action. The talent which lifted his last book, "Queer Street," into a realm of its own, has here produced a delicate, crisp, deft story which possesses humor and whimsicality surely handled. The characters stand in one's memory, they move plausibly, what acts upon them and determines their lives that night is a quality fully translated to the reader. He or she will be indubitably charmed by the imagination and writing-power of Mr. Shanks.

Boy of Old Florence.

"THE APPRENTICE OF FLORENCE," a boy's story. By Anne D. Kyle. (Houghton Mifflin, $2.)

Boys who like books based on history will enjoy this story of an Italian boy of medieval days who left his home in the country and went to the City of Florence in quest of his father, who had left home some years before and had not returned.

While there, Neno was offered a position as an apprentice, but he refused it because he had a mother and brother who were expecting him back. Upon his arrival at his home he was unhappy because his mother thought his father was dead and was planning to marry another man, who was very rich.

He returned to Florence and became a silk merchant's apprentice. He had many thrilling adventures. He saved his master's niece from a band of ruffians who kidnaped her during a street festival.

He found his father on his deathbed in a little tavern beside the sea. His father just before he died told him of a route to the land of spices, by going west instead of east. In vain he made the attempt to interest some silk merchant, but he was thought foolish. But the silk merchant for whom he was an apprentice adopted him.

The book is interesting and exciting, as you can see by the few experiences I have told.

Gabriel Writing Opera.

For several years Gilbert W. Gabriel, dramatic critic of the New York American, has won top rank for the accuracy of his box-office forecasts in Variety's annual list. Now he turns a novelist's eye on Broadway with the publication of his third novel, "Great Fortune," by Doubleday Doran. From his previous book, "I, James Lewis," a narrative of John Jacob Astor's fabulous days issued last year, Mr. Gabriel is now constructing the libretto of an opera.

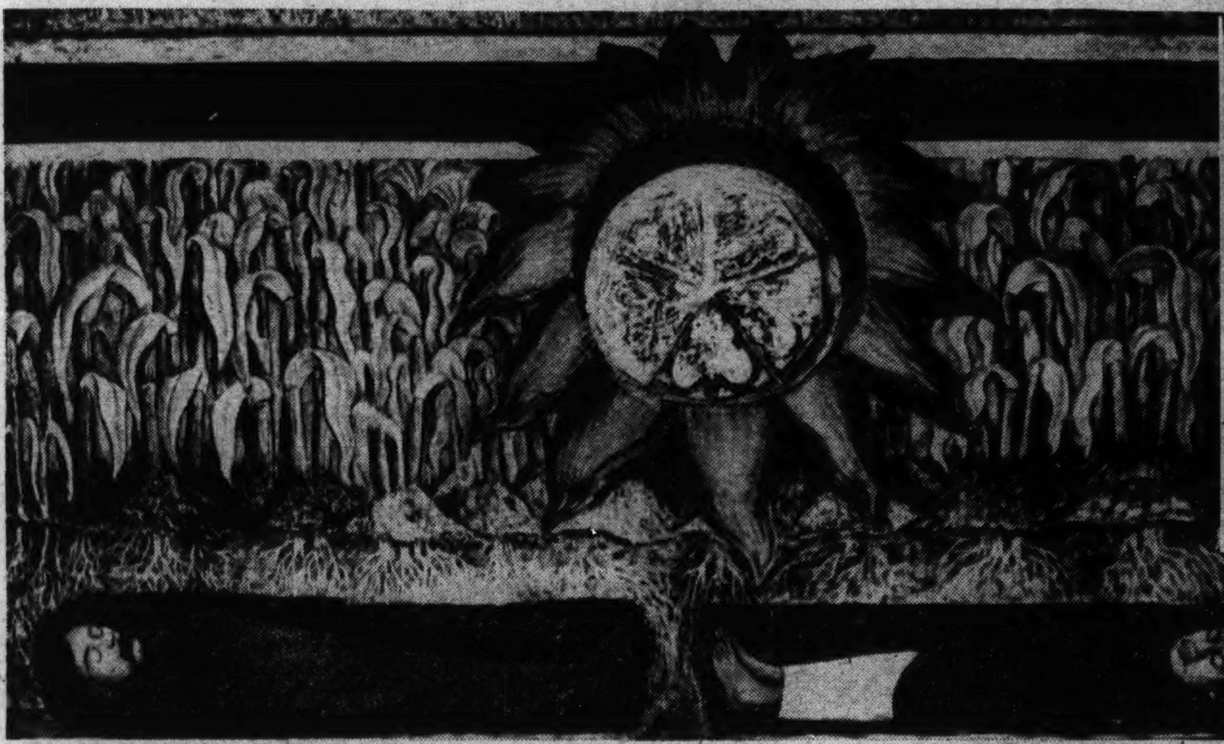
Rivera's Frescoes Dynamic in Vigor



"Forces Under the Earth." well-known mural by Rivera, in chapel of the agricultural school at Chapirigo. The painter and fresco master, upper right.

Reproductions in Exhibit Here Reflect Life Like Mirror.

THE recent controversy between Diego Rivera, probably the most famous fresco artist now living, and the authorities of the Rockefeller Center in New York over his designs for murals, attracted many visitors to the exhibition of reproductions of Rivera frescoes which opened in the Division of Fine Arts at the Carnegie Public Library, Seventh and New York avenue northwest, Wednesday.

This famous exponent of liberty in art, and art before politics, and the power of the brush over the sword, has injected much of his sentiments into his frescoes. It is apparent to even the casual observer that the artist is Mexican to the core, in spite of his migration to Paris, Rome and Russia in pursuit of art. There is strength and power in his work of the character that suggests the holding of a mirror up to a people so that they may see themselves as others see them rather than following the idea of many modern artists to teach lessons, by their paintings. Just as some of our American painters aspire to represent the people of our city streets in their paintings so has this Mexican caught the people of his native land in giving them fresco pictures for their institutions. No one but one brought up in Mexican surroundings could essay the daring, brilliant color effects which so surely strike the proper high-pitched color notes of harmony. It is this brilliant manipulation of colors that redeems the drawings from starkness and harshness.

Was Pioneer in Cubism.

This pioneer in the new technique of fresco painting, which consists in the application of earth colors on the surface of wet plaster, uses three coats of plaster one upon the other. He also was a pioneer in cubism. He won renown in Paris by his exhibition in the Independent Artist Exhibition of "Two Women Seated." His trend toward cubism of these early days is seen in his present-day paintings, although he has not allowed himself to be hampered by any cults in the development of his genius. He has passed into his own realm of art, in which conformity to any rule or imitation have no place.

While Rivera was born in Mexico January 6, 1886, he was of Russian-Spanish descent. The passion to draw developed as early as 3 years old and he spent his childhood in drawing rather than playing with other children. In his early youth he went to Paris to study and then to Italy. During the World War he painted freely his impressions of men and their relation to life. When he returned to his native Mexico in 1921 he began a mural on the wall of the amphitheater in Mexico City and a few years later made the frescoes for the ministry of education's preparatory school.

Painted Russian Revolution.

Wishing for more artistic worlds to conquer Rivera went to Russia in 1927 on the invitation of the Public Education Commission of the Soviet Union in Moscow. He painted the story of the revolution in a way that the rank and file could understand perfectly.

All the time he was in Russia there was a conflict between his membership in the Communist party and his art and he was finally expelled because he preferred to paint.

When he returned to Mexico he took the commission from Dwight W. Morrow, then United States Ambassador to Mexico, for his gift to the City of Cuernavaca of the frescoes for the Palace of Cortez, "Conquest of Mexico." In 1930 Rivera went to San Francisco, where he made the frescoes for the Luncheon Club of the Stock Exchange.

Even the critics of Rivera acknowledge that he excels any artist in fresco painting since the Renaissance.

Notable among the reproductions of the work of Rivera at the Public Library exhibition are those from the Chapel of the Government School at Chapingo, Mexico. One of the most notable reproductions is "Forces Under the Earth." This shows a portion beneath the earth and men wrapped in their vivid orange colored burial blankets. Above waves the corn stalks green and almost iridescent in its green and gold luster. In the center is a huge botanical section of a radiant sunflower. In the National Palace the motif is national scenes and people with a rare reflection of likenesses and type and the use of Mexican colorfulness.

The details of the "Street Fair" in the Ministry of Education murial shows the lustrous eyed senorita, the swaggering Mexican dandy, and the fat priest looking with paternal tolerance at his people at play.

The self portrait of Rivera is no more flattering than his portraits of others are. It is a study in bronze tones, and shows a Mexican-looking man with head on one side with an expression of smiling weary cynicism on the face.

Arrived and Unknown Artists In Show at Ten O'Clock Club

Artists who have won their spurs and young artists who are still struggling for recognition are showing their works side by side at the fall show of the National Society of Independent Artists, which opened recently in the galleries of the Ten O'Clock Club, 1603 K street northwest.

Judging by the shows given by this group last year, the exhibition is of particular value to those studying the art trends of the times. Of course, in shows of this kind many works are displayed which would not have found their way into an exhibit if they had to go through the regular channels of hanging committees. But, on the other hand, out of these shows have come outstanding pictures. The Society of Independent Artists in Washington is young, but it is encouraging that such shows in other cities have developed artists who, when competing in other shows, carried off prizes. Russell Parr is in charge of the exhibition.

Rosenberg Etchings Shown.

The clear concise etchings and dry points by Louis C. Rosenberg which mark the exhibition at the Division of Graphic Arts at the Smithsonian Building this month has attracted many of the discriminating in such fields of art. The delicacy and attention to line displayed in one of the outstanding pieces of the collection, "St. Mary Abbotts, London," shows the famous building and towering steeple and a portion of the street with trees and buildings in the distance. There is more restraint in the dry point of "Santa Cecelia Ronda." Mr. Rosenberg gives life to his work by the introduction of figures going about their ordinary daily activities beneath the shadows of the famous buildings and streets which lend themselves so well to his art.

There is something quite different in his etching of the Brooklyn Bridge than the interpretations of this famous structure so often seen in current etchings exhibitions. One of the other few American scenes in this collection shows the Federal Building in Chicago at night.

Washington's art colony, familiar with the work of P. A. de Laszlo, the artist whose portraits of prominent persons in the National Capital have placed his name high in artistic annals here, learns with satisfaction of the success of the exhibition of his pictures at the Knoedler Gallery in New York City. He has a suavity and grace in dealing with his subjects which mark all his portraits and enables even those who are not students of art to identify his work. Particular interest is being attracted by the portrait of Theodore Roosevelt, painted in Paris by de Laszlo in 1910, and lent to the present exhibition by Mrs. Robert Bacon.

Keller Drawings Hung.

Those interested in the artistic technic of drawing will view with much pleasure the new exhibition in the Fine Arts Division of the Library of Congress of the collection of drawings by Arthur I. Keller recently given to the library by Mrs. Keller. These drawings were made for reproduction as illustrations in various books and magazines. They form part of the cabinet of American illustrations recently established at the library. The exhibition was formally opened on November 13 and will be continued several months.

Beans in Varied Delicious Recipes Answer That Simple Meal Question

SIMPLICITY is the one great virtue in a menu most appreciated by the housewife who has other interests than cooking. She is apt to ask for directions for putting together a nourishing and appetizing meal that is easy to prepare.

For the housewife who does not care to devote her entire day to cooking, and for the puzzled occasional Thursday night supper-getter, a special blessing from heaven is sauerkraut and wieners. Persons accustomed to the bromidic lamb-chop-and-canned-peas adinfinitum supper will possibly be repulsed by its foreign bitterness. Others, appetite and wanderlust satisfied, will rise from the meal with the feeling they have been abroad six months and are very glad to be getting back.

Sauerkraut and Wieners.

1 quart sauerkraut

1 pound frankfurters (or 2 frankfurters per person)

Sauerkraut may be obtained in tins at the grocery or in bulk from a delicatessen. Pop sauerkraut and frankfurters together into large saucepan, add half cup of water and cook slowly 20 minutes. Remove to large heated dish and serve.

The peculiar style of this meal will depend upon the foods which accompany it. A loaf of dark rye bread, obtainable at delicatessens, should be upon the table. For dessert, serve apple strudle or kasekuche (delicious cheese cake) which may be bought at German or other bakeries. For those who care for it, let a large stein of the legal 3.2 beer be filled beside each plate.

Saturday Night Tradition.

The second suggested menu is a Saturday night supper: Of course, baked beans. As such, Saturday night baked beans have enough to recommend them. They appeal sentimentally to New Englanders and to all Americans who care for historical tradition. But for our purpose, for the cook whose week-end is likely to be busy with guests, parties, and special cooking, they are a blessing purely practical.

The honest way to cook baked beans, however, the soaking and all-day baking, is neither practical nor simple on a modern gas range. And canned baked beans are notoriously a little awful. Here, then, are the horns of a dilemma.

But there is a trick, a lovely little cheating trick. You do it with a can. And if you have one, you may serve beans in a real Boston pot, still hot and cooking from the oven, when you set them on the table.

Baked Beans Moderne.

2 cans baked beans
¾ cup dark molasses
¼ pound fat salt pork
2 teaspoons mustard
1 teaspoon salt

Cut a half-inch slice off salt pork and place in bottom of bean pot. (Casserole or baking dish will serve if you do not possess the Boston article.) Cover with contents of one can of beans, add half the molasses, mustard and salt. Pour over remaining can of beans; bury pork near top, leaving rind exposed, and cover with remaining molasses. The pork should be cut through to rind at inch intervals, but not broken into pieces. Cook in slow oven three hours, and serve at table in pot or casserole.

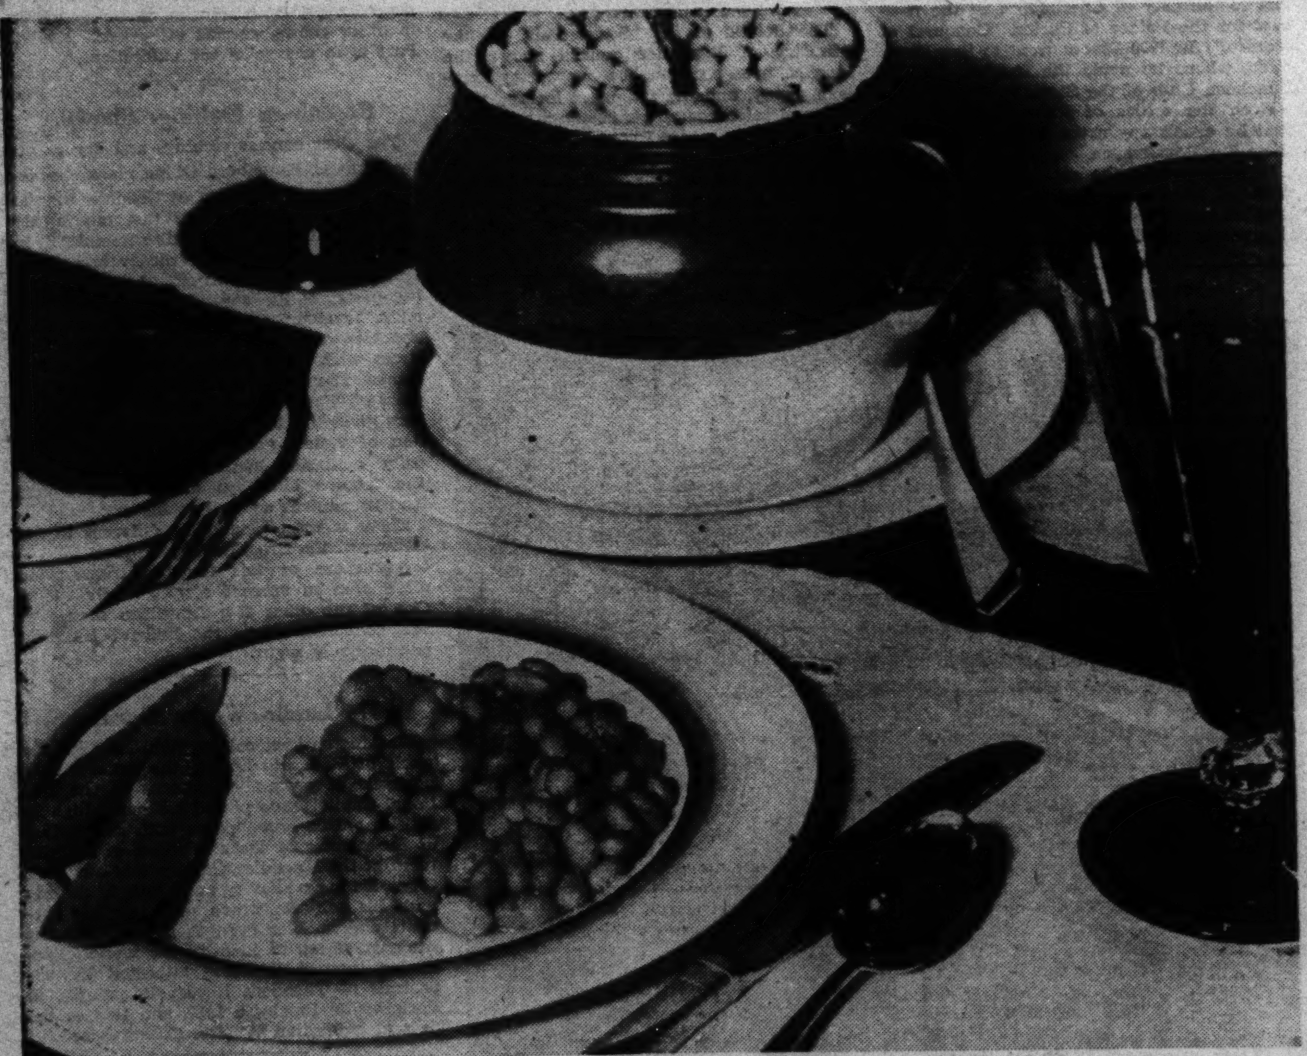
Brown Bread Is Simple.

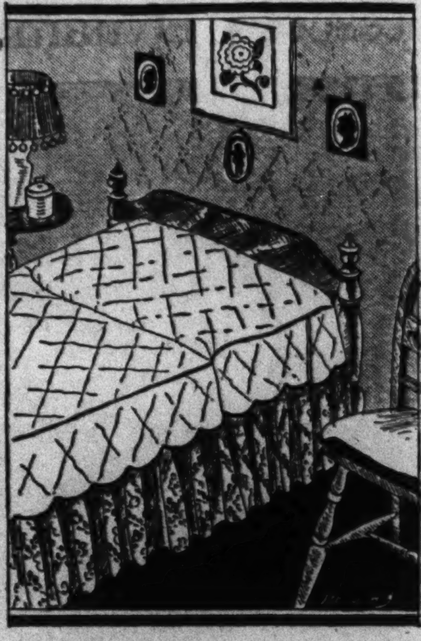
This, like the other meal suggested, has its proper accompanying foods. Brown bread, of course. You can make this, surprisingly simply, from a cook book recipe. Like all steamed foods it is infallible. However, as it must be watched, the cook who wants her Saturday afternoon free will buy tinned brown bread or a round loaf from the bakery and heat it just before supper. A can should be heated in boiling water ten minutes; a loaf, steamed in a strainer over boiling water, three or four minutes.

The rest of the baked bean supper consists of slaw, pickles and a dessert. Serve, for example, mustard, dill and sweet pickles, which you may purchase if you have not made your own. At a New England table, as many as five or six varieties of pickle will be set before you. And you are expected to eat them! For dessert, pop a pan of apples into the oven during the last hour that your beans are baking. Cider is the logical beverage, of course.

Probably you will not want baked beans for breakfast the following morning. Only a Yankee digestion can take quite that. But you might like the cold leftover brown bread. Nobody quite knows, by the way, just what the function of mustard in baked beans is. It is thought it probably increases their digestibility.

You just don't have to think about these meals. Yet they are distinctive and characteristic. And do not forget, it is the side dishes that make them.





Clever silhouette pictures make interesting wall decorations.

Economize on Energy By Arranging Kitchen

In planning the ideal kitchen, or in selecting the apartment or house which contains this most important workshop of women, several points are to be considered.

First, last and always, consider the work to be done there. It should be oblong, with no more floor space than actually needed. Spaciousness costs miles of extra steps, immeasurable wasted energy.

Study relation of the kitchen to the remainder of the house. See that there is easy access to front and back doors, to the telephone, to the stairways leading to basement and second floor, and direct connection with the dining room.

Insist on floors, walls and woodwork that are durable, suitable in color and easily kept clean. Watch out for adequate ventilation in all weather, and good lighting, both as to daylight or artificial light. Working surfaces should represent the most comfortable height. All equipment, large or small, should be grouped in compact work centers, for preparing raw foods, cooking, serving, clearing away and dish washing. These groups should be installed from left to right, in the order in which such jobs are done.

Decoration Depends Upon Individual Preference.

THE interior of any home, be it modest or luxurious, depends greatly on wall treatment for interest and individuality.

Someone with an appreciation of beauty has said: "Whatever tires the eye is ugly; whatever does not tire the eye is beautiful."

This is a priceless axiom to bear in mind when decorating wall spaces. Two extremes of tiresomeness are all too frequently encountered. One is the tendency toward tasteless cluttering of paintings, objets d'art and photographs. The other is to present a flat, uninteresting monotone of wall surface.

Where funds permit, the easiest solution is to commission the services of an experienced decorator. Such a solution is never to be strongly recommended, however, to the person of taste with the time and means to express it completely.

Price Is Within Budget.

Artists are doing pleasing work these days at a price within the range of the moderate purse. A portrait of one's children might nicely solve the problem of a bare wall space over a mantelpiece, a low bookcase or a couch. A painting of favorite flowers, or maybe of a quiet landscape or thundering waters, brings the color and restfulness of the out-of-doors into one's home, and gives interest and depth to the walls of a room.

Silhouettes are always in good taste as a wall decoration, and lend themselves equally well to boudoir, children's rooms or living rooms. This is an excellent means of commemorating ancestors with distinguished profiles. Any good looking profile will do, however, and the gallery of silhouettes may include one's favorite friends, one's relatives or children, and, for the children's rooms, their best liked playmates.

Flowers Can Be Used.

Those who are adept with a camera may have successful snapshots reproduced in enlarged form into soft brown and gray mural effects. These misty shapes of drooping boughs and flickering streams can be used on the walls of hall or dining room, and make an ideal gift for the nature-loving city dweller.

The same idea may be carried out with cut flowers, preferably those of decided character, used in a container of unusual design. An illustration of this idea is the "shadow box" seen at flower shows. Such flower arrangements are placed behind a not-too-heavy white cloth, with a strong light so placed as to throw the shadow into clear relief. This grouping is framed in with a black molding rectangle.

Perhaps this idea comes from the land of incense and nature lovers, where these elusive flower shapes are so admired that they are perpetuated in iron silhouette. They come in many sizes and are suitable for accents over tables and radios.

Chinese Effect Used.

Dignified window draperies of cream poplin lined in scarlet, hanging in straight folds from ceiling to floor, formed the setting for such flower decoration in a distinguished dining room. At the top of each window a Chinese iron shadow picture was centered. A very large one over the buffet table was background for pewter holding scarlet berries. The furniture was black with a red line.

Intriguing is the sport of catching the shadowgraph of an active child. It can be done by any amateur. If the child is quite young, have the camera set, all ready and in focus. Place him as close as possible to a window, well lighted but not in direct sunshine. Have his face parallel to the glass so as to get the best outline. Take a snapshot with medium opening. The results are surprisingly good and, of course, can be enlarged to any size. Outdoor silhouettes can be taken just at sunset by pointing the camera directly at the sun and taking a snapshot with small opening.

The illustration shows one practical use of this black art. Silhouettes of the child's playmates are grouped in pleasing fashion at the bedhead. The larger picture is a modern version of the old botany print: An oversized flower in clear color and simple arrangement. A quilted "throw" picks up the color in the pleated chintz flounce.

Plant Life Contrasts Offered at Gardens

wine; a Cypripedium, from India, with its involved, incongruous contours, shaped like a wooden shoe with a tongue retracted above it, and under the tongue two miniature wings, slate hued. Cattleya of New Granada, "Queen of the Orchid Family," with a little bell-flower of a pale lilac, smelling like varnish. The Epidendrum Ciliata, "Weed of the Orchid Family," used for hybridizing; Oncidium from Guatemala, with a golden bloom; Odontoglossum, with six foot sprays, yellow, white, and purple-spotted; Vanilla Plantifolia, the climbing orchid from which vanilla is made; the Oncidium Ornitchorynchum, whose odor defies any intimacy with it; Calantha Igneo Occulata, the yellow-green orchid of the burning eye; "Espiritas Santos," the Holy Ghost orchid of Ecuador, like a dove with wings outstretched; Phajus Grandiflora, the Nun Flower, a nun, hooded, with tiny face and nose sticking out—orchids from Borneo, Madagascar, Sumatra, Pernambuco, strange places, and far off. Most startling, to see the epiphytes, air plants, with their dead white roots, like skin-shedding green snakes, crawling out the sides of their boxes, to lie supine on the tree limb they reach to, then, at the tipmost end of the tenacle, bursting into vivid green life, while all the way along, the root, they suck life from the tree.

Milady must pay for her orchids, for they are not a comman flower; and lives are lost, when men dare high cliffs, tall trees, and jungle fevers in the search for these exotics of the flower world.

Gardens Are Old Institution.

This year marks the 141st anniversary of the founding of the U. S. Botanic Gardens, although its true site was not provided by Congress until 1820. In 1792 orders were given to begin clearing away the alder swamps which occupied the point adjacent to the site of the Gardens, at which Pennsylvania Avenue was designed to begin its historic course from Capitol to White House.

In 1796, David Burnes, the Scots farmer, who owned much of the land upon which Washington now stands, was given fair warning that he planted crops on the Avenue and the Mall at his own risk, as something might be done at almost any time to make a thoroughfare. Thomas Jefferson first had begun the clearing away of the brush that covered the land, but still in 1810, the Avenue was a morass, traversible only on horseback.

In 1820 Congress approved the site which both Washington and L'Enfant had intended for the Garden, but not until 16 years later—in order to rid the section of stagnant and malarial mire—did any appropriation come through for draining the land, and then only $5,000.

Navy Gathered Specimens.

In 1838 Lieut. Charles Wilkes, of the U. S. Navy, at congressional behest, took six naval vessels upon an exploring expedition to the South Seas and brought back four years later (under the direction of W. D. Breckenridge, a botanist) what for those days was a comprehensive collection of strange specimens. These flora were of no use to the Navy Department, so they found their way to the Botanic Garden—and that was the real beginning of the U. S. Botanic Garden.

The historic trees in the old garden are to be removed to the new site; the Crittenden oak, which marks the spot where John J. Crittenden made an unavailing speech attempting to avert the Civil War; the Beck-Washington elm is from one planted earlier by Washington himself; a plane tree from the Vale of Cashmere, brought by Thaddeus Stevens; a sycamore planted by the "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash," Senator Daniel Voorhees; a Chinese oak from the grave of Confucius; two cedars of Lebanon, and others of historic association.

The Bartholdi Fountain, designed by the same hand which gave us the Statue of Liberty and likewise purchased from France, was removed to its new site also and set up once more, after a few months in a nearby warehouse. The memorial to Gen. Meade, hero of Gettysburg, now occupies the old site of the fountain.

Girls' School to Take Men.

For the first time in four years the exclusive femininity of the Willimantic (Conn.) State Normal School will be broken by the presence of a male student. Hyman Reiner has enrolled as a freshman for the fall semester. The new three-year courses, intended principally to qualify students for principalships, however, are expected to attract more men.

WHO is this?
This is Ogden.
What is Ogden doing?
Ogden is walking nervously.

He is in a highly chaotic state. Ogden has the jitters.

What is the matter?

He is worrying.

What is Ogden worrying over?

He is worrying over an appointment.

Man or woman?

Man.

Who is the man?

The man is a man in a white coat. He is a dentist.

Is Ogden afraid of the dentist?

Do you know anybody who isn't afraid of the dentist?

Did Ogden make the appointment?

Yes, Ogden made the appointment and was quite resolute and jolly about it. But he is a different man now.

Why?

Because the hour of the appointment is at hand.

What will Ogden do about it?

He will pace up and down the hallway in front of the dentist's office, as he did in the corridors of the building taking the elevator, and finally turn around and beat it away from there.

And then what?

He will telephone that he has been detained at the office.

What about the tooth?

Oh, it will feel pretty good by that time.

are included, such as ice cream, "which was served at a state dinner about 1811, the first time it was ever heard of."

True Prescriptions.

Then, too, there is a section devoted to "Tried and True Prescriptions" for preparing everything from roasted redbirds on toast, "johnny cakes" and spoon bread to concocting persimmon beer and "grandmother's cherry bounce." Whether or not such cookery was calculated to improve the human race need not be argued here, but all of this is proof enough that the Washington housewife of 1827 had plenty to keep her busy, for this was before stoves were commonly in use, and meals had to be prepared in iron pots (swung on cranes in the fireplace) or in ovens, skillets and kettles placed on stone hearths. Yet the savors and flavors that came out of those kitchens of a bygone century would put modern cookery to shame.

Having presented ideas on etiquette, menu suggestions and recipes, this book was not yet finished with its mission of helpfulness. There is a chapter on carving written especially for men. In the words of the author, "A bad carver is a source of mortification to himself and his friends, and it is important to understand the sleight-of-hand required to dissect a roast or fowl properly, which is always more easily accomplished if one stands up while attempting it."

of two passports. When she has wanted to travel alone I have had to lend her my passport because the baby travels on it.

Despite all the annoyances, I have been relatively fortunate. In my newspaper work I have come across ever so many cases where people have suffered far more from Mr. Cabel's mistake.

Just after the war I saw French women, five at a time, in the reception room of the American Embassy in Paris, seeking some means of getting permission to sail for America and join their husbands. I have had them come to my office, scores of them, seeking advice. I have seen not a few marriages go on the rocks because of this difficulty.

And at the same time, I have known American women who are married to foreigners and who have returned to the States and within a few hours gone through the formalities for regaining their citizenship. And not even in the back of their heads was there the slightest thought that ever again would they reside in their native country.

I think that it is perfectly all right for American women to be double-faced and keep their nationality when they don't intend to live in their country. But I think some change should be made in the law to protect the wives that American men marry abroad, and who would like to live in America and teach their children to become good American citizens. I think American men have that coming to them.

News of Capital Players and Culbertson's Bridge

Passing Very Essential When Hand Indicates It Is Needed.

By Frank B. Lord.

Of all sad words of lad or lass,
The saddest are these, "I'll have to pass!"
Musings of Maude Muller.

THERE is a goodly contingent of expert contract players who take stern issue with the meditations of the late Miss Muller with respect to the melancholy of passing a bridge hand. They will tell you that the word "pass" is often the most eloquent in the lexicon of bridge when it is spoken at the right time which is when the hand warrants it. The sadness comes when it is not used and a bid gets the partnership into trouble.

Reverting again to Novelist "Jim" Hay and his recently acquired prowess at the game, "Jim" avers that one of the chief difficulties he has heretofore found—and which has been largely responsible for his ill fortune at games of chance—has been his inability to pass. This was obtained both in poker and in bridge. A desire to play every hand has been one of his obsessions with expensive results, until he learned the truth of what an old music master once told him that no one can play every instrument in the band.

* * * *

Mr. Hay has taken some exceptions to the statements made concerning his bridge playing, in last Sunday's issue of The Post. He writes as follows:

"Frank B. Lord, Esq.,
"The Rhadamanthus, Solon and Marcus Aurelius of Bridge Whist,
"The Washington Post:

"Suh: In your highly diverting column on Sunday last you slam, slander and belittle Col. Logan Golsan's "Thirteen System" by recklessly describing it as "mystic;" and you further discount its merits by intimating, if not openly charging, that a dub like myself can become a terror to the old-school champions in contract only after devoting deep and prolonged study to the colonel's 16-page explanation of how to play the game.

"Wherefore, I respectfully ask you to tell your myriad readers the "13 System" is neither mystic nor difficult. It is so short (meaning brief) that a boy infant (the dumber of the species) can cut his eye teeth on it; nay, while yelling blue murder in the agony of cutting his bicuspids, he can assimilate the "13 System" between meals. It is so simple that a beauteous maiden, while dreaming dreams of her first, last and only love, can memorize its every rule and regulation. It is so common-sense and practical that any dub, while mastering it, can at the same time and in his one-track mind entertain vivid visions of challenging and licking every insolent expert who has damned him for a nitwit, clod and clown.

"Col. Golsan, suh, invented the "13 System" for the benefit of all that merry company who, regarding their cards as relaxation, desire to play contract without first having to memorize a Six-Yard Shelf of Textbooks, take a course in analytical trigonometry and translate Cruden's Concordance into the dots and dashes used by the U. S. Signal Corps.

"I am, suh, A Thirteener, and yours to command,

"JAMES HAY."

Did you ever play contract with a joker? Well, here's how it worked out in a recent game with Harry Wensel, of the Bureau of Standards and captain of the winning Phychems in last year's Federal Bridge League tournament, voluntarily taking the role of the court jester.

The hand follows:

North
S—J 10 9 7 5 2
H—6 3
D—5 4
C—J 6 3

West
S—A Q 3
H— ——
D—A K Q J 9
C—A 8 7 4 2

East
S—4
H—Q 10 9 8 5 4 2
D—10 7 6 2
C—9

South
S—K 8 6
H—A K J 7
D—8 3
C—K Q 10 5

The bidding: South dealer.

1NT (1)	2H (2)	P	4H (3)
P (4)	5D (5)	P	P
Dbl (6)	P	P	5H (7)
Dbl (8)	6D	P	P
Dbl (9)	P	P	P

Ed Rounds, captain of the Acros of the Federal Bridge League, was playing West, Mrs. Rounds, East; Mrs. Wensel, North, and Mr. Wensel, South.

The figures in parentheses following the bids constitute the index to the explanatory notes prepared by Mr. Wensel himself illustrating his joke which operated as a boomerang.

1. Prefers N. T. to a 4 card suit bid.
2. West ought not to expect South to be fooled by this old chestnut.
3. The joke is now on West (apparently).
4. Enjoying the joke (at present).
5. Taking his medicine?
6 Doesn't know when he is well off. Just a trouble-maker is South.
7. The double works—still enjoying the joke.
8. Thinks it safe to double any bid now.
9. Doesn't yet know the joke is on South.

A diamond led by North was all that kept West from making 7 odd. The spade finesse was taken and three clubs were trumped in dummy, the 8 of clubs was established and the only trick taken by South was the King of Spades.

Mrs. Eugene "Pat" Nolan inaugurated her winter season duplicate game for pairs at the Roosevelt on Tuesday evening of the past week. The series will run throughout the period from November 7 to and including the month of May, 1934. There will be weekly prizes for the winning pairs and also a monthly prize to be awarded to the player scoring the highest number of match points, as well as a season prize. This will go to the player making the highest percentage (averaged) for the season.

Each night of the play there will be a sweepstakes provision which will not affect the regular play, as entry in this event will be optional. Players in order to be eligible for the monthly prizes must play each Tuesday evening during the month, and to be eligible for the season prizes must play not less than 20 of the 30 games. Not more than three-fourths of these games may be played with any one partner. The match point method of scoring will be used.

Miss Lucille Claire Smith will start her season series of duplicate games for beginners tomorrow night at her studio in Florence court. Many good contract players who understand rubber bridge are more or less inexperienced in the duplicate form of the game. It is Miss Smith's intention to cater to this class of players for the purpose of developing duplicate "fans" especially in view of the popularity which duplicate is now attaining. The play will be by invitation.

Lieut. Comdr. W. A. Corley, president of the Washington Bridge League, has designated W. R. Lewis to the very important job of chairman of the committee on ethics of the league.

Little unethical play has developed in Washington, but there has been plenty of loose chatter. It is hoped that the formation of a committee on ethics will go far toward eliminating this groundless talk which is highly distasteful to every honorable player in Washington. The committee will seek to check the scandalmongers and ask them to present proof.

Mr. Lewis is one of the most widely known players in the National Capital and also has a high reputation throughout the country as an expert and authority on the game, both as to its ethics and method of play. He started in at old-fashioned whist at the age of 17 with the Washington Whist Club of bygone days and played in many of the tournaments of the American Whist League. He was one of the original directors of the American Bridge League. His appointment will undoubtedly have the effect of placing bridge on a high level in Washington.

Lead-Directing Double Is Means of Warning Partner on Lead.

The Lead-Directing Double.

IT IS a sound general principle that Doubles of Slam contracts, when made with a view to increasing the penalty reward, are unsound. This axiom is based upon the fact that players of any reasonable skill do not contract for Slams when they are more than 1 trick short of their goal, and in many cases an extreme example of unbalanced distribution will make of no avail what were seemingly sure winning tricks in the Doubler's hand. Even when the Slam seems doomed to certain failure, in many cases the Penalty Double will reveal the location of key cards and thus enable the Declarer to save a trick which will offset the increased bonus gained by the defending side.

Players—and especially master players—have realized the underlying truth of the situation discussed in the preceding paragraph and for this reason the bidding situation here described is now utilized as a means of conveying certain definite inferences to their partners and thus making more probable an Opening lead or a line of defense which would not otherwise have been adopted.

The principle of the lead-directing Slam Double was first worked out in detail by Mr. Theodore A. Lightner, a member of the World Championship team, just before the recent victory of that team in the first international competition for the Charles M. Schwab trophy in the summer of 1933. According to this principle, the Double of a Slam contract, whether it be a six-bid or a seven-bid, warns the doubler's partner not to make what would otherwise be his obvious Opening lead.

In cases in which the doubling hand has previously bid a suit, the Double should be construed as an imperative command not to lead that suit. In other cases, where Third Hand has doubled an adverse Slam contract, the leader's choice of an Opening lead depends upon a close study of the bidding and the inferences which he may properly draw from it. A lead through a suit which Dummy has bid and Declared has denied may possibly be indicated. A lead of a singleton which might otherwise have seemed unsafe or from a tenace in an unbiddable suit or from a long suit in which partner has shown a void are inferences which may be drawn when the doubling hand has never bid. The author does not mean to imply that Slam contracts should never be doubled purely for penalties. However, the lead-directing Slam Double is based upon the theory that a safe Double of a Slam bid does not require any definite Opening lead to insure the defeat of the contract.

An interesting example of a Slam which would have been defeated by the application of the lead-directing Double occurred in the recent international match in London for the Charles M. Schwab trophy. The hand and bidding were:

My Penalty Double offered the only chance to defeat the contract, and Mrs. Culbertson read the Double without difficulty. Unfortunately, while the American team had agreed to use the lead-directing Double, they had neglected to announce it in advance to their opponents, and Mrs. Culbertson felt that to take advantage of it without such prior announcement might be considered as the use of a private convention. She deliberately lead a heart, sacrificing many hundreds of points, rather than take even the slightest advantage of her opponents.

Another example of a situation calling for the lead-directing Double is:

East can see from his holding that West probably has a singleton club, but he knows that West probably will consider it foolhardy to lead it, since the opponents have bid the suit. Having first-round trump entries, East is sure that a club Opening will develop a ruff for the setting trick. West, after his partner's Double, knows that East has read him for a singleton club and opens it unhesitatingly.

Daughters Follow in Fathers' Footsteps

Martha Jefferson grew to womanhood it was apparent that she had inherited much of her father's intellect and genius. Educated abroad and strengthened mentally by travel and the society of the literary folk always to be found about her father, she surpassed most of the women of her day in accomplishments.

Burr Proud of His Daughter.

By a strange trick of fate there was another woman in Washington at the time of her father's Presidency who, like herself, had been endowed with much of her father's brilliancy of intellect and originality of character. This woman was Theodosia Burr, the daughter of the unhappy Aaron Burr, at that time Vice President of the United States. Both of these daughters were the chosen companions of their only parents; both were ardently attached to fathers they deemed the wisest and greatest on earth and they have become forever linked with the life and times of each.

Although still a very young woman when lost at sea, Theodosia Burr remains a fragrant memory even unto this day. The brilliancy, the wit and the keen insight of Aaron Burr, the political sagacity and lofty ambitions which he used to such poor advantage, she inherited in even higher degree. Her father found in hers the one mind that could match his. Something of what she meant to him and his high opinion of her, in which all who knew her concurred, is to be found in this letter to her, which he composed at the time of his duel with Alexander Hamilton.

"I am indebted to you, my dearest Theodosia," he wrote, "for a very great portion of the happiness which I have enjoyed in this life. You have completely satisfied all my heart and affections had hoped for or even wished. With a little more perseverance, determination and industry you will obtain all that my ambitions or vanity had fondly imagined. Let your son have occasion to be proud that he had a mother."

Beaman One-Man Show.

There is a one-man exhibit by Katherine Beaman at the Tenley Branch of the Public Library, 4539 Wisconsin avenue, where 12 pictures, mostly small ones, are on view. Katherine Beaman has exhibited at the Corcoran Gallery, The National Gallery of Art, The Arts Club and The Art League. Also in Chicago where Forbes Watson, in The Arts Magazine, said of her "Roofs," "More serious aesthetic problems are met without being allowed to predominate in one of the best and most sensitive landscapes in the exhibition."

New Airline Inspector Real Aviation Pioneer

Twenty-three years ago R. W. Schroeder, of Chicago, decided to ally himself with a new interest. He wanted to fly an airplane, and, in order to learn the game properly, he attached himself as aviation mechanic to Otto Brodie. The latter taught him to fly. Many names, famous in flying history, are connected with these first six years in the story of Schroeder—Walter Brookins, Mickey McGuire, Lincoln Beachey, Katherine Stinson and Max Lillie are a few.

In 1916 this same Schroeder, then with the rank of sergeant, entered the aviation section of the Signal Corps of the Army. In August, 1917, he was commissioned a first lieutenant; in December, sent to Ellington Field, Tex., to start and command the first school of night flying. While there he designed and tested the first parachute flare and developed the first ground and airplane lights for landing purposes.

In 1918 he was transferred to McCook Field, at Dayton, Ohio, and made chief test pilot of the Army engineering division. During his stay here, he conducted the first blind-flying tests undertaken by the Army, the first controllable pitch-propeller tests and the first supercharger-engine tests.

In 1920 he broke the German world record for altitude by 14,000 feet, when, with his oxygen tank frozen and his eyeballs covered with ice, he drove his plane to a height of 38,100 feet—then fell, unconscious, to within half a mile of the earth before he regained control.

That year he resigned from the Army Air Service as Maj. Schroeder, a title which he still holds in the Air Corps Reserve.

Since that date he has been associated with aeronautics in statistical and regulatory positions—with the Underwriters Laboratories as aviation engineer; with the Ford Airlines, as designer, builder and manager of the Curtis Airport in Chicago, and in 1931 was made president of Sky Harbor in Chicago, a position he held until the spring of this year.

Recently the announcement of his appointment as chief of the Airline Inspection Service of the Department of Commerce was made by Eugene L. Vidal, its director of aeronautics.

Maj. Schroeder thus brings his years of active experience in both military and civil aeronautics to the Government—a combination of invaluable benefit.

Malvina Hoffman Contributes Unique Work to Art and Science

No sculptor of modern times will contribute more valuable aid to history and science than Malvina Hoffman when she completes her task of making a record in bronze of the principal types of people living on earth today for Hall of Man of the Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago.

This monumental task has been the chief objective of the famous sculptor's life for more than three years and she has traveled in many strange lands and corners of the world to obtain models for the full-length figures and heads and busts for the 110 studies she is to contribute.

On a visit to Washington after a return from an exploration of Oriental subjects, Miss Hoffman pointed out that these studies will be an advance in museum figures from both an artistic and scientific viewpoint. It is a real advance from the system of taking a dummy and dressing it up and saying it is an Indian or a Japanese.' Miss Hoffman has injected into her models, made from live subjects in their native surroundings, the physical differences apparent in the various races. These differences are discernible in many ways to an anatomist, in ears, the set of the shoulders and so on.

This American sculptor learned anatomy by dissecting for three years as a student at the College of Physicians and Surgeons. Miss Hoffman is an American, but her father, Richard Hoffman, was an Englishman who came to this country in 1850 as solo pianist with Jenny Lind.

Curfew Hour Goes NRA.

For the first time since 1907, the Toppenish, Wash., curfew will not ring at 9 p. m., following a change through the NRA. It will ring at 6 p. m. instead. The curfew hour was advanced so that merchants, pledging to close at 6 p. m., will know when the business day is over.

Huge Distillery Planned.

Plans are being made in Peoria, Ill., for construction of the largest distillery in the world. The completed plant will cover 19 acres, will grind 20,000 bushels of grain daily, and will turn out 12,000 barrels of liquor weekly.

Chief of Secret Service Affable But Not Voluble

In this day of writing and speech-making by those who hold important Government offices, the absolute and determined silence of Chief William H Moran, of the United States Secret Service, is unusually noticeable.

Of course, if Chief Moran could be induced to write, or even to talk, he would have a fascinating story to tell of half a century of inner secrets not only of this country but of other countries as well.

This distinguished-looking chief of the Secret Service has all the aspect of the kind of official one reads about in stories as head of England's Scotland Yard or other such well-known detective organizations. He is one of the best-dressed men in official life in Washington. His iron-gray hair and mustache give an air of distinction to his ruddy, young-looking face. His eyes gaze straight at you and through you and have a merry glint in them. He is a good dinner guest and has many good stories to tell, but not one of them can be even distantly connected with the service of which he is the head.

Chief Moran is also the supreme power behind the corps of Secret Service operatives, whose duty it is to guard the President of the United States and run down counterfeiters.

The world hears much about the war-time activities of the secret services of England, France and Germany. But there is little data on the activities of Uncle Sam's. This is because Chief Moran believes that Secret Service operatives who talk impair their usefulness to their country.

Riding to Hounds Still Popular Virginia Sport

grams, the outstanding of which in recent years has probably been that of Mrs. John Hay Whitney at her Llangollen Farm, at Upperville, where stable after stable has been erected. Mrs. Whitney also has built special quarters for the men attached to the stables and has laid out a race course declared by experts to be the American example of the famous Aintree course in England.

Hunting lodges and their fixtures together with the high prices paid for the lands do not anywhere nearly complete the story of the wealth that fox-hunting has brought to northern Virginia. With these two factors as the background of the wealth, one also finds that fox-hunting is paying daily dividends to the northernmost portion of the Old Dominion in the form of employment to large numbers of the section's citizenry in the lodges and stables.

Fox hunts usually get under way about 8 a. m. during the months of November and early December and then as the weather becomes more severe, the huntsman, hounds and hunter take the field either at 9 or 10 o'clock, weather permitting. It has long been the custom of the fox-hunters to gather at the home of some distinguished member or at a spot believed close by the red foxes' den for the start of the hunt.

In the early days of fox-hunting, the huntsmen usually arose early in the morning and rode his favorite mount to the spot appointed for the chase to begin. At the present time, however, in most instances trainers take the master's mount to the starting place for the hunt and the huntsmen arrive by auto to the tune of the baying of the pack ready and pulling at their leashes for the start of the day's chase.

With the dogs in the lead and a whipper-in on either side of them, the chase begins. In recent years it has not been infrequent for the huntsmen and hounds to jump a fox within a few minutes after the chase is under way—and then the fun begins.

The fox is known for his craftiness in the thickets and woodlands. Once pursued by the hounds, he will go to any end to throw the enemy off his trail. With baying hounds closing in on him, the fox often makes for a nearby stream in which he has been known to wade for hundreds of yards before leaving from the opposite bank in his effort to throw the pack from his trail. Many a fox has escaped by using his wits, but the hounds are also artfully trained for a long chase and unless the fox happens to be close by a den, he is usually pursued for hours and finally brought down. With the pack closing in on its quarry, the fox puts up a vigorous fight, but the dogs know how to handle their victim and coming in on him as a unit seldom fail to down the fox. Close on the heels of the hounds are the huntsmen who endeavor to bag the fox alive, if possible, but in many cases the pack has finished its work before the riders come up.

With the actual chase ended, the hour for merriment arrives. To the home of some member of the fox-hunt, the huntsmen retreat for the social part of the chase—the hunt breakfast. No social function of northern Virginia has gained more prominence in recent years than the hunt breakfast. It is a feast in the true sense of the word.

So the sport goes on. Unaffected in the main by the depression and as good in foul weather as in fine, the huntsman, hound and hunter still continue to attract hundreds of ladies and gentlemen to the field. It is in the fall that fox-hunting is popular, but in the summer season, the huntsman finds equal glory and thrills in exhibiting his mounts in the rings of the Virginia Horse Show Association where spirited competition is always the keynote of the hour.

But the story of the huntsman is a story of intense training of both his mount and his pack in addition to building the good-will of the farmers about him. Many of the older huntsmen will recall the days when a pack of the Loudoun County Hunt killed more than a score of sheep during a day's hunting 25 years ago. This pack was destroyed and the hounds were trained to distinguish between the red fox and the sheep. Today, few if any sheep fall prey to the pack.

Lafayette Escadrille Veterans Visit Memorial to Founder

Among the many pilgrims to the Washington Cathedral are survivors of the Lafayette Escadrille, that gallant squadron of American youth, who rushed high-heartedly to the cause of liberty before the United States entered the World War.

They come to see their founder, Norman Prince, of Boston, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick H. Prince, memorialized in the Cathedral in the bays of the Chapel of St. John the Divine, containing the altar and reredos which Mr. and Mrs. Prince have given in memory of their son, and "others who made the supreme sacrifice through devotion to liberty, civilization and humanity."

Norman Prince was killed on the Western Front in 1916 before the United States entered the World War. It is remembered that among other members of the Escadrille were Alan Seeger, the poet, and Quentin Roosevelt, youngest son of former President and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, who was killed and fell with his airplane behind the German lines.

HAIRBREADTH HARRY
by F. O. Alexander
I'VE COME TO BID YOU GOOD-BYE, BELINDA, AND TO ASK YOUR GOOD WISHES FOR OUR SUCCESS —
HARRY!! YOU'RE- YOU'RE NOT GOING UP IN THAT DAFT PROFESSOR'S SPACE SHIP?!!
WHAT NOBLER ADVENTURE THAN TO DETERMINE WHETHER OR NO LIFE EXISTS ON THE METEORS ABOVE?!! OUR FINDINGS MAY GIVE US CLEWS WHICH WOULD REVOLUTIONIZE OUR IDEAS OF THE UNIVERSE ....
BUT HARRY! THIS PROFESSOR - EVERYONE KNOWS HE IS CRACKED - BALMY - HYPPED AND DIPPY!
EVERY PIONEER COURAGEOUS ENOUGH TO DEPART FROM THE HUM-DRUM EXISTENCE OF HIS TIME IS CRAZY - UNTIL HE SUCCEEDS!! THEN THE AIR IS FULL OF "I TOLD YOU SOS"!
I SEE YOU'RE DETERMINED, DEAR, AND I WISH YOU GO-SPEED AND A HAPPY LANDING! IN FACT, I'LL PACK YOU A LUNCH!!
ISN'T THE SHIP A PIP? IT'S PROPELLED BY POLAR RAYS! AH! HERE COMES THE PROF NOW IN HIS OXYGEN KIT - YOU SEE, HE'S WILLING TO RISK HIS LIFE ON THIS INVENTION OF HIS — GOO-BYE, HARRY! BLUB-BLUB..
THEY'RE OFF!!
A BRAVE PAIR, THOSE TWO!!
THE BAND IS PLAYING "TILL WE METEOR AGAIN"
FAREWELL, HARRY! DROP ME A LINE!
HARRY IS THRILLED BY THE SPACE-SHIP'S PERFORMANCE —
FIVE MILES IN THREE MINUTES AND GAINING SPEED! IT'S WONDERFUL, PROFESSOR!
AT THIS POINT, ME RECKLESS FELLOW, LET US BE FRANK! HEH-HEH-HEH!!
RUDOLPH!!
EXACTLY! AND PROF. MIFFENPOOF AS WELL, ALTHOUGH I HAVE DOFFED MY NEAT DISGUISE! HEH-HEH! PERMIT ME TO ADVISE YOU ARE IN YOUR COFFIN, ME HAUGHTY DUPE!!
AT 500 MILES YOU SHALL START FALLING! HEH-HEH-HEH!! IT IS ALL PART OF THE WONDERFUL INVENTION! AND NOW - TA-TA!! TOO BAD YOUR CHUTE HAS BEEN CUT! HEH-HEH-HEH!!
YOU CUR!!
AND AS IT IS COMMONLY SAID THAT RATS ARE THE FIRST TO LEAVE AN ILL-FATED SHIP, IT BODES EVIL FOR OUR HERO AND THE SPACE-SHIP!!
HEH-HEH-HEH! REGARDS TO THE METEOR-MEN, ME DOOMED LOTHARIO!
A WEEK LATER WHEN IT WAS GENERALLY AGREED THAT THE SPACE-SHIP HAD MET WITH DISASTER, RUDOLPH, HAVING LANDED SAFELY, CONDOLES WITH BELINDA —
THOUGH HE WAS A RIVAL FOR YOUR HAND, I FELT AS A BROTHER TOWARD HARRY! LET ME TAKE YOU UNDER ME WING AND MAKE YOU HAPPY, BELINDA!
RUDOLPH! THAT NOISE OUTSIDE —
WHAT A WEIRD CRAFT! AND LOOK! THAT- THAT THING CRAWLING OUT!??!
CURSES! I SEE ME RIVAL ON THE INSIDE .. I'LL BE MOSEYING ALONG.
AT 500 MILES THE POWER OF OUR SPACE-SHIP FAILED, BUT SO DID THE PULL OF GRAVITY! WE JUST SAT THERE IN SPACE UNTIL THIS METEOR MAN RESCUED ME! THESE PEOPLE ARE WAY AHEAD OF US IN THESE MATTERS - THEIR SPACE-SHIPS ARE AS COMMON AS PUP-FLEAS!!
GMFP- BLLITZZ- VUMP!!
OH, HARRY! YOU'LL BE FAMOUS! BUT YOU CAN'T PALM THIS THING OFF AS A METEOR-MAN 'CAUSE THE MAN WHO READS OUR METEOR LOOKS NO DIFFERENT THAN ANYONE ELSE!

THE GUMPS
SIDNEY SMITH
ON WITH THE BIG TRIAL- THE COURT HOUSE IS PACKED TO THE DOORS TODAY, AS CHESTER GUMP TAKES THE WITNESS STAND TO CONTINUE THE CASE AGAINST RED RIGGLES WHERE JERRY LEFT OFF-
AND SO AFTER MY PONY RAN AWAY, I WALKED ON AND ON TILL I CAME TO THAT SHACK IN THE MOUNTAINS WHERE RED RIGGLES AND HIS GANG WERE HOLDING JERRY PRISONER- THEN THEY CAPTURED ME TOO, BUT WHEN THEY LOCKED US IN, WE BURNED DOWN THE WALLS AND ESCAPED- THEN THOSE MEN THERE CAME BACK- WHEN THEY SAW THE SHACK BURNED DOWN, THEY WERE WILD- THEY TORE UP THE FLOOR, AND THEY HAD ABOUT A MILLION DOLLARS IN GOLD HIDDEN-
IT'S ALL A FRAME-UP-
WE NEVER HEARD OF THAT SHACK-
IT ISN'T SO-
CHESTER CONTINUES THE STORY- TELLS HOW HE AND JERRY FOLLOWED THE OUTLAWS- HOW THEY FINALLY MANAGED TO GET THE CHART AND FIT IT TOGETHER, PIECE BY PIECE- AND THEN TRACED THE DIRECTIONS TILL THEY FOUND THE PLACE WHERE RED RIGGLES HAD BURIED HIS PLUNDER-
WHAT DOES THAT MEAN? WHAT PROOF HAVE YOU? WHERE'S THE EVIDENCE?
I HAVE IT RIGHT HERE- THE VERY SAME TREASURE CHART THAT RED RIGGLES DREW- YOU CAN SEE WHERE THEY CUT IT INTO PIECES AND WE PASTED IT TOGETHER AGAIN-
WHAT! DOES THE STATE BASE ITS CASE ON THIS FLIMSY PIECE OF EVIDENCE? RIDICULOUS! HOW DO I KNOW YOU DIDN'T DRAW THIS MAP YOURSELF? HOW DO I KNOW WHERE YOU GOT IT? THIS IS NO PROOF!
IF THE STATE HAS NO BETTER PROOF THAN THAT, I SHALL HAVE TO ALLOW THE OBJECTIONS OF THE DEFENSE AND THROW THE CASE OUT OF COURT-
JUST A MINUTE, YOUR HONOR- THE STATE HAS PLENTY OF EVIDENCE- REAL EVIDENCE-
IF IT'S PROOF YOU WANT, WE'LL BRING IT IN BY THE TRUCK LOAD- AND WE'LL SHOW THIS COURT THAT OUR PROOF IS AS GOOD AS GOLD!
LOOK AT THAT! PROSPERTY'S COMING BACK-
WHOOPS! THEY'RE MOVING THE U.S. MINT-
HERE'S YOUR PROOF, JUDGE- REAL 18 KARAT EVIDENCE- IF THAT'S WHAT YOU WANT-
AND THIS IS JUST THE FIRST INSTALLMENT- THERE'S MORE COMING-
AS THE JUDGE AND THE LAWYERS WAIT AND WONDER WHAT THE PROOF WILL BE, THE DOORS OPEN, AND IN WALK COUSIN CHARLIE AND SHERIFF WATTS BRINGING THE GOLD ITSELF-
THIS IS THE GOLD AND CASH THAT THE TWO BOYS FOUND YOUR HONOR- THE SHERIFF SAYS THIS PLUNDER WILL CLEAR UP A DOZEN BIG ROBBERIES THAT RED RIGGLES AND HIS GANG COMMITTED-
THE EVIDENCE IS ACCEPTED- AND THE COURT OFFERS A PUBLIC CONGRATULATION TO THE BRAVE LADS FOR THEIR FINE WORK-
THOSE ARE THE KIND OF BOYS THIS COUNTRY NEEDS-
A GUMP IS A GUMP- THAT'S ALL I SAY-
I GUESS THAT CLINCHES THE CASE-
THEY OUGHT TO, PUT UP STATUES OF THOSE TWO BOYS-
THE COURT BREAKS INTO AN UP ROAR AS THE JUDGE SENDS THE CASE TO THE JURY- CHEER AFTER CHEER RINGS OUT FOR THE TWO BOYS-
IN LESS THAN FIVE MINUTES, THE JURY IS BACK WITH A SEALED VERDICT-
BECAUSE OF THE FEARLESNESS OF TWO MERE BOYS AND THEIR COURAGEOUS TESTIMONY IN THE FACE OF THREATS AND WARNINGS, THE JURY HAS BEEN ABLE TO ARRIVE AT A FAIR AND JUST VERDICT- THE COURT FINDS ALL FOUR OF THE PRISONERS GUILTY AND TO END THEIR CRIMINAL CAREERS FOREVER, THEY ARE SENTENCED TO HARD LABOR FOR THE REST OF THEIR NATURAL LIVES
MY BOYS- I AM PROUD OF YOU-
IT WAS CHESTER
NO- JERRY REALLY GETS THE CREDIT-
THE END OF RED RIGGLES' BAND- A TRIUMPH FOR THE TWO BOYS- IT WAS THE FIRST TIME THAT ANY COURT HAD BEEN ABLE TO GET A CONVICTION AGAINST THE BANDIT GANG-

DICK TRACY
by CHESTER GOULD
SURE, I'M ALL RIGHT— SAY — I FEEL SWELL!
AFTER SECURING THE SERVICES OF DR. OILER, THE SPECIALIST, JUNIOR WAS REMOVED TO A CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, WHERE UNDER EXPERT CARE THE BOY HAS PASSED SAFELY THROUGH THE CRISIS AND IS NOW WELL ON HIS WAY TO RECOVERY FROM THE BURNS HE RECEIVED ALMOST TWO WEEKS AGO . . .
KID, YOU'RE SNAPPING OUT OF IT FINE. THE DOC SAYS YOU'LL BE GETTING OUT OF HERE SOON.
WE MUST GO NOW, JUNIOR. WE'LL SEE YOU TOMORROW— SLEEP TIGHT!
G'NIGHT, MISS TESS.
HE'S DOING SPLENDIDLY, FOLKS, MUCH BETTER THAN I EXPECTED. HIS FIGHTING SPIRIT HAS SAVED HIS LIFE.
WE'VE GOT YOU TO THANK FOR HIS GOOD CONDITION, DOC. THOSE BURNS WERE TERRIBLE— YOU'VE ALMOST PERFORMED A MIRACLE.
WELL, GOOD BYE, DOCTOR. WE'LL SEE YOU TOMORROW.
WELL, TESS, THE KID'S GOING TO BE ALL RIGHT—THAT'S ALL THAT MATTERS! I WAS AFRAID FOR AWHILE HE WAS A GONER!
OH, I'M SO HAPPY, DICK, THAT HE'S OKAY!
BY THE WAY, WHAT'S THE LATEST REPORT ON BIG BOY? HAS HIS TRAIL BEEN PICKED UP ANYWHERE?
NOT A TRACE OF HIM YET, TESS— SAY! LOOK! WHAT'S THAT EXCITEMENT?
WHAT'S THE MATTER, OFFICER?
THIS BOY WAS PUSHING THE BABY BUGGY AND JUST WALKED INTO THE PATH OF THIS BIG TRUCK HERE.
HE STEPPED FROM THE CURB SUDDENLY— MISTER, PUSHING THE BUGGY—AND I JUST COULDN'T STOP! THAT BIG CRATE OF MINE WAS TOO HEAVY!
HE'S BREATHING— HE'S ALIVE. MAYBE SOME BROKEN BONES THOUGH!
WHAT ABOUT THE CHILD IN THE BABY CARRIAGE— IS HE OKAY?
CHEE! WE HAVEN'T LOOKED IN THE BUGGY YET!
SAY! THE KID MUST STILL BE SLEEPING! THERE'S NOT A SOUND. . . . AND. . . WHY IT LOOKS LIKE HE'S STILL COVERED UP— OH! OH!
LOOK! THERE'S NO BABY IN THE BUGGY, TRACY! THE BUGGY'S FILLED WITH . . .
SECURITIES!
BONDS! UNDOUBTEDLY STOLEN BONDS! ABOUT TWENTY GRAND WORTH! SAY—THIS THING'S GETTING MORE INTERESTING EVERY MINUTE!
GET THE KID TO THE HOSPITAL! I'LL TAKE THE SECURITIES AND THE TRUCK DRIVER DOWN TO HEADQUARTERS AND GET A STATEMENT FROM HIM— THEN WE'LL QUESTION THE BOY LATER.
OKAY, TRACY.
THAT EVENING, JUNIOR CURIOUSLY PROPS HIMSELF UP ON ONE ELBOW BETTER TO SEE THE NEW PATIENT WHO IS BROUGHT IN VERY PALE AND QUIET TO BE PLACED ON THE ADJOINING BED . . .
WELL— I WONDER WHO THAT KID IS—AND WHAT'S WRONG WITH HIM? HM-M??

One of the strangest episodes in United States military history revolves around the peace-time venture of old "Fort Blunder" as it was called in derision, on the northern frontier of the United States. The fort, which was later called Fort Montgomery, was started in 1816 near Rouses Point, N. Y.

The site of the fort was well selected for conditions as they existed in 1816. It was situated so that its guns protected and commanded the only entrance to Lake Champlain, control of which was looked upon at that time as a strategical masterpiece. The fort was also well located to defend itself against land attack—it was surrounded entirely by water and had, as its only connection with land, a drawbridge. Its gun corridors lay in two tiers, rifle slits were provided in the stone walls, and a sod embankment was laid on top of the whole fort to provide breastworks from behind which swivel guns could be trained on the enemy.

All in all it was a well located and well planned fort—but for one great error. The United States made the mistake of building it in Canada. Nobody knew it at the time, but the land on which the fort was started belonged to Canada.

Canada showed what she thought of border fortifications by turning around and giving the partly completed fort, together with the land on which it stood, right back to the United States. This was in 1842. A year later building was resumed, and the fort was called Fort Montgomery. No garrison was ever stationed there. In 1908 the fort was entirely dismantled.

The building still stands, but its guns have been long since removed and many of them now stand in various cities as park and public square ornaments.
